Forest Health in the Blue Mountains Charles G. Johnson,1994 Natural disturbances are important to ecosystem processes Disturbances historically have occurred in the vegetation of the Blue Mountain area of northeastern Oregon and southeastern Washington The primary modifying events that historically have cycled through most of its plant communities are fire grazing and browsing insect and disease epidemics windthrow flooding and erosion Knowledge of plant successional pathways enables managers to predict the probable course of community development for a disturbance regime Recommendations for restoring the Blue Mountains area are to reintroduce fire into the ecosystem restore rangelands and enhance biological diversity by practicing landscape ecological management and by emulating natural patterns on the landscape Periodic and timely sampling after these activities is critical to assessing the results for adaptive management needs

Assessment of Timber Availability from Forest Restoration Within the Blue Mountains of Oregon, 2008 Changes in forest management have detrimentally affected the economic health of small communities in the Blue Mountain region of Oregon over the past few decades A build up of small trees threatens the ecological health of these forests and increases wildland fire hazard Hoping to boost their economies and also restore these forests local leaders are interested in the economic value of timber that might be available from thinning treatments on these lands This study identified densely stocked stands where thinning could provide a reliable source of wood and examined the quantity distribution and economic value of the resulting timber for 5.5 million acres of national forest lands in eastern Oregon Our findings verified local land managers observations that the land base to support timber harvest targets in the region is smaller than anticipated in the past Legal restrictions and current management practices have reduced the acreage available for harvest and mechanical restoration Additionally we found that on lands where active forestry is allowable thinning of most densely stocked stands would not be economically viable Findings from this analysis can help establish a common understanding of Blue Mountains vegetative and economic conditions for managers trying to restore the region's national forests
