Health Care Systems in Developing Countries in Asia Christian Aspalter, Kenny Teguh Pribadi, Robin Gauld, 2017-07-14
For the last two decades major Asian economies have successfully kept their economic growth momentum going. Now as these economies are entering a new phase of economic growth more attention is being paid to their respective states of social development especially the provision and the expansion of social security and in particular health care. Academic study of the development of health care in developing countries has been for the most part neglected by the literature and in depth country case studies that are directly comparable on a one to one basis have not yet been conducted in a systematic manner. This book volume also proposes a new stance on health policy and the health care policy paradigm one that focuses on saving lives from premature death as well as illness accidents misery and poverty based on the normative theory of developmental social policy DSP. Health Financing in the Developing World Guy Carrin, 2011. A collection of peer reviewed articles and contributions to books this overview of the finance of health insurance concentrates on developing countries. The material covers various financing strategies and explains how each can or cannot help improve the transition toward universal coverage. The model plans shown here are particularly useful for policy makers and technical advisers who have to decide upon health financing policies or are engaged in a debate about them and the sample forms can be adjusted to the particular economic and political context of the developing countries involved. In addition there are reminders that this process varies in some countries universal coverage may take time and require a step by step approach. In other developing countries a swift transition to universal coverage may be quite feasible.

Social Health Insurance World Health Organization. Regional Office for the Western Pacific, World Health Organization. Regional Office for South-East Asia, 2005 Health development in countries of Asia and the Pacific is constantly facing new challenges but financial constraints prevent people from seeking timely health care and completing the treatment regimen Many countries in Asia and the Pacific have introduced cost recovery by charging for publicly provided health services and the share of private financing in total health care spending has significantly increased in the past two decades However such reforms were carried out without adequate measures to protect the poor and private out of pocket financing is an inequitable and inefficient way of funding health services There has thus been growing interest in health insurance not only as a financing mechanism but also as an effective social safety net This publication is the outcome of joint efforts by the WHO Regional Offices for the Western Pacific and South East Asia the Asian Development Bank and health care financing experts in the two regions By the use of case studies it documents regional experiences in health care financing arrangements through prepayment with critical analysis on factors linked to success failures and lessons learnt in various socioeconomic settings While experiences from 12 selected countries have been highlighted the lessons are relevant for all countries in Asia and the Pacific The publication will therefore be useful for policy makers and for international development partners undertaking technical assistance in the field of social security and social health insurance
