Purpose: Utilizing teacher socialization in physical education theory, the aim of this study was to develop a survey to measure physical education teachers' socialization experiences and comprehensive school physical activity program involvement. Method: Instrument development included a review of existing comprehensive school physical activity program and socialization instruments, Delphi method to evaluate face and content validity through expert feedback, and a pilot test to examine the instrument's psychometric properties. Results: Upon completion of expert feedback, three items were removed, four items were revised, and open-ended questions were added to each survey construct. The pilot test yielded 28 completed surveys (40% response rate). Bayesian exploratory factor analytic procedures showed that items had statistically significant loadings and were quality measures of the corresponding constructs. Survey subscales had acceptable and high internal consistency coefficients. Discussion/Conclusion: Results suggest that this instrument is a trustworthy tool for continued research examining physical education teachers' socialization and comprehensive school physical activity program involvement.

A comprehensive school physical activity program (CSPAP) is a nationally recommended framework for school-based PA promotion (Society for Health and Physical Educators of America [SHAPE America], 2015). A CSPAP is identified as a coordinated, multicomponent, "whole-of-school approach" to achieve two major goals: (a) educate school-aged children with the knowledge and skills necessary to lead a lifetime of PA and (b) ensure that school-aged children meet the recommended 60 min of daily PA (SHAPE America, 2015). The framework includes five components: (a) physical education, (b) PA during school, (c) PA before and after school, (d) staff involvement, and (e) family and community engagement.

Research supports the effectiveness of each CSPAP component in helping to increase PA in school-aged children (Chen & Gu, 2018; Erwin et al., 2013). However, implementation of five CSPAP components is limited (i.e., 16% of elementary schools, American Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance [AAHPERD], 2011; 3% of secondary schools, Brenner et al., 2017). Webster et al. (2020a) have recommended approaching the conceptualization and implementation of CSPAPs with greater flexibility. In addition to quality physical education as the foundation of the program, schools may differ in the number and combination of other components they choose to implement.

Physical education teachers (PETs) are recommended to serve as school-wide PA leaders (PALs) who lead, advocate, and organize CSPAPs (Stoepler et al., 2020a). The knowledge and skills recommended to serve in such a role extend beyond what has customarily been taught in PET education (PETEd) programs or been traditionally modeled and expected of PETs in K–12 school settings (Webster et al., 2015). Previous literature has recommended that PETs receive training and exposure with PA promotion to effectively serve as a school PAL (Dauenhauer et al., 2018; Kelder et al., 2014). Furthermore, the CSPAP literature suggests that competence (i.e., beliefs and confidence) is a critical consideration for PETs and classroom teachers who implement CSPAPs based on their lifetime experiences as a K–12 student and within teacher certification training programs (Webster, 2011; Webster et al., 2010, 2013, 2015). Lived experiences socialize individuals to learn skills, knowledge, values, and norms of occupations (Clausen, 1968); however, the examination of experiences and lifetime factors influencing PETs' involvement with CSPAP is limited and worthy of exploration (Carson & Webster, 2020; Webster et al., 2020a, 2020b).

Theoretical Framework

A lens to examine how a PET's lifetime experiences are associated with current behaviors and instructional practices is teacher socialization in physical education theory (socialization). Socialization describes how a PET's attitudes, beliefs, and teaching practices are influenced by their lived experiences throughout a lifetime, which are categorized into three distinct, nonlinear phases: (a) acculturation (AC), (b) professional socialization (PS), and (c) organizational socialization (OS; Lacey, 1977; Lawson 1983a, 1983b). Framing "lived experiences" around the phases of socialization theory is advantageous for researchers to identify lifetime factors that influence PET's current CSPAP involvement (Carson & Webster, 2020; Richards et al., 2014, 2019).

The first phase of socialization (i.e., AC) is defined as any K–12 childhood experience that has an impact on a PET's attitudes and behaviors toward the teaching profession (Lawson, 1983a).

Socialization Into Physical Education Thomas J. Templin, Paul G. Schempp, 1989 Teacher Socialization in Physical Education K. Andrew R. Richards, Karen Lux Gaudreault, 2016-12-08 Socialization is a complex process which has a profound effect on how we experience teaching and learning The study of teachers lives and careers through the lens of occupational socialization theory has a rich history in physical education However as the social and political climates surrounding education have changed so have the experiences of teachers This book pushes beyond traditional perspectives to explore alternative and innovative approaches to socialization Written by a team of leading international physical education scholars this is the first edited collection of scholarship on teacher socialization to be published in more than two decades Divided into five parts the book provides a review of current knowledge on teacher socialization in school settings as well as suggestions for different approaches to understanding teacher socialization and recommendations for future directions for studying teachers lives and careers A testament to what is known and what still needs to be learned about the lived experiences of physical educators Teacher Socialization in Physical Education New Perspectives provides valuable insights for all physical education students teachers and instructors Socialization Into Physical Education , 1993 Teaching Social and Emotional Learning in Physical Education Paul M Wright, Kevin Andrew Richards, 2021-06-29 Teaching Social and Emotional Learning in Physical Education is the ideal resource for understanding and integrating social and emotional learning SEL competencies into the structure of a physical education program alongside physical activity and skill development goals This text should be incorporated as a key resource to guide physical education teacher education courses specifically focused on social and emotional learning while also providing supplemental readings for courses related to physical education curriculum instruction assessment and or models based practice Similarly practicing physical education teachers who are interested in developing a stronger focus on SEL in their teaching will find that the book provides a comprehensive resource to guide their professional learning and practice Effect of Occupational Socialization, Waivers, Exemptions, and Substitutions on Physical Education Curricula Laura Prior, 2016 Physical education teachers beliefs and values have been shown to be shaped by three types of socialization acculturation professional socialization and organizational socialization To our knowledge there are no studies directly aimed at examining the relationships between physical education teacher socialization teacher beliefs and curriculum development In addition granting of waivers exemptions and substitutions WES appears to be on the increase and impacting curriculum design The present study investigated the influence of occupational socialization on both elementary and secondary physical education teachers beliefs and curricula as well as examining WES in physical education Participants included 14 elementary physical education teachers and 16 secondary physical education teachers Additional participants included one state Department of Education official eight principals two assistant principals six students and six parents from three school districts in which WES were permitted and prevalent Data collection methods were comprised of formal and informal interviews focus group interviews observations film snippets fictional curriculum plans and official documents Data were reduced to key themes by employing standard interpretive methods Using occupational socialization theory three groups of teachers were identified non teachers conservatives and progressives Each teacher group was closely aligned to orientations for teaching and coaching Orientations had been formed during their acculturation and were largely untouched or reinforced by their physical education teacher education PETE and the cultures in which they worked generally supported the non teachers perspective Three forms of WES were identified those that involved students participating in in school activities and out of school activities in lieu of physical education and innovative waivers that gave administrators the power to curtail provision of the subject WES were primarily favored by everyone with the exception of most physical education teachers WES evolved from marginalization of physical education in relation to academic subjects and competitive sport as well as poor physical education The findings provided clues as to how the cycle of poor and non teaching produced by the current pattern of socialization into physical education might be broken Practical implications focused on the need for careful selection of preservice teachers ways in which to deliver PETE and the need for increased accountability in schools

Occupational socialization OS research has assisted in training preservice and developing inservice mainstream physical education teachers Study one examined OS s influence on the practices and perspectives of adapted physical educators APEs Qualitative data were analyzed using analytic induction and constant comparison The APEs possessed traditional or progressive teaching orientations having been indirectly attracted to a career as an APE through participation in sport and physical activity and interactions with persons with disabilities High quality adapted physical education teacher education A PETE appeared to exert a powerful influence on their values and pedagogies School cultures and conditions experienced upon workforce entry served to either support or negate their programs Several hypotheses are provided regarding the influences of acculturation professional socialization and OS on inservice APEs teaching The second study described OS s impact on nine Korean teachers reading and delivery of PE Qualitative data were analyzed by analytic induction and constant comparison Findings showed the teachers underwent a unique pattern of OS resulting in seven of them possessing teaching orientations one being coaching oriented and one having a non teaching orientation The teachers acculturation led to a high proportion of them being teaching oriented on entering PETE where traditional PETE reinforced this orientation Innovative school cultures offset and compensated for the weak PETE experienced by some teachers Suggestions for future research in this line were made The third study examined OS s influences on 11 international sport pedagogy faculty members FMs perspectives and practices regarding physical education teaching and PETE Data sources formal and informal interviews and documents illustrating the FMs practices were analyzed using constant comparison and analytic induction FMs current perspectives and practices did not differ from those espoused by native born FMs and there were few differences between perspectives and practices of FMs from different regions of the world The acculturation primary professional socialization and primary OS of most FMs had been positive leading to them possess strong traditional teaching orientations early in their careers FMs secondary professional socialization generally impacted their development of progressive ideas about physical education and PETE FMs secondary organizational socialization was also largely supportive of these progressive beliefs service teacher education programs Despite being largely viewed as the least effective form of socialization pre service teacher education has the potential to influence a teacher s confidence and performance in the classroom Results of this study indicate that the socialization experiences of teachers continue to be strong indicators of performance and that both specialist and generalist teachers lack positive socialization experiences that include students with physical disabilities in physical education This limits the experience knowledge and skills they have to draw on in their physical education teaching practice Coupled with a lack of resources and expertise available teachers are left under prepared and without enough resources to provide high quality physical education to children living with physical disabilities
