

INDUSTRIAL SOCIOLOGY

MODULE 1- INDUSTRIALISATION

Industrialisation is the process of social and economic changes whereby a society is transformed from a pre-industrial society into an industrial one. Industrialisation connotes a shift from an agrarian economy leading to the rise of manufacturing industries.

It was industrial revolution in England and some other European countries which laid down the foundation of industrialisation.

According to Ms Gore, "industrialization refers to a process where in production of goods with the use of hand tools are replaced by the production with the use of power driven machines". This brings corresponding changes in the technologies of agriculture, transport and communication and also changes in the organization of trade and finance.

According to the concise Oxford Dictionary of Sociology, the term industrialism and industrialization denote a transition in the methods of production which creates vast increase in the wealth creating capacity of modern societies as compared to traditional systems.

CHARACTERISTICS OF INDUSTRIALISATION

- It involves large scale mechanisation and automation.
- It lays the foundation of factory system under which an entrepreneur employs hired labour in the production system.
- It involves the application of scientific methods in industry for the purpose of improving productivity and quality.
- It leads to division of labour and specialisation.
- It increases the geographical and social mobility of labours.
- It involves better utilisation of idle natural resources for speedy economic development.
- It attracts labour from agriculture and allied occupations to industry.

CAUSES OF INDUSTRIALISATION

The main factors which gave stimulus to industrialisation are as follows:

- Large Scale Production: modern factories carry on large scale production to meet the demands of large number of people. Production is carried on in anticipation of demands.
- Mechanisation: The developments in the field of science and technology have increased the degree of mechanisation in the modern factory system. The efficiency of the factories has increased many times because of new innovations.
