The ‘Interlinking of Rivers’ Project in India: Potentials and Challenges

India’s river-linking project carries significant possibilities and challenges for the country. Through the transfer of water from water-rich to water-stressed regions, the project may address the issue of floods and droughts, but it may also produce an adverse impact on the catchment areas of the respective rivers. This paper assesses the ‘Interlinking of Rivers’ project in India through a discussion of its positive and negative effects.

Amit Ranjan and Faiza Saleem<sup>1</sup>

In 2017, the Union government of India pushed forward the ‘Interlinking of Rivers’ (ILR) project by allocating US$87 billion (S$117.37 billion) to it. The interlinking of rivers in India was first proposed by Sir Arthur Cotton in colonial India. After the independence of India in 1947, then-Union Minister of State for Power and Irrigation, K L Rao, spoke about the plan in the 1960s to link the Ganges River with the Cauvery River through a 2,640-kilometre long canal.<sup>2</sup> By 1970s, this was developed into a ‘national river grid’ plan by which the surplus waters from the Ganges and Brahmaputra would be diverted to the central and southern States. In 1974, an Air force pilot, Dinshaw J Dastur, submitted a proposal to the Indian government.

Adapting to high temperatures: evidence on the impacts of sustainable agricultural practices in Uganda

Ignaciuk, A., Maggio, G., Mastrorillo, M., Sitko, N., Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, 2021-02-17

Rising temperatures due to climate change pose a significant threat to agricultural systems and the livelihoods of farmers across the globe. Identifying farm management strategies that reduce sensitivity to high temperatures is therefore critical for moderating the adverse effects of climate change. In this paper, we use spatially granular climate data merged with four waves of household survey data in Uganda to examine empirically the relationships between high temperatures, agricultural production outcomes, and the adoption (including its duration) of three sustainable agricultural practices: organic fertilizer adoption, banana coffee intercropping, and cereal legume intercropping. We do this using a fixed effect model with instrumental variables to address potential endogeneity issues. Our findings indicate that while exposure to high temperature does reduce farmers' crop income, the adoption of these practices can offset the negative impact of high temperatures on such income. Indeed, we show that the benefits of adopting these practices on the total value of crop production increase monotonically as temperatures increase from their long-term averages. Moreover, the number of years a farmer adopts a practice is associated with higher total value of crop production, and this relationship holds across the full distribution of observed high temperature deviations. Taken together, the results suggest that organic fertilizer adoption, banana coffee intercropping, and cereal legume intercropping are effective options to adapt to rising temperatures in Uganda, and these benefits increase with the duration of adoption. Adaptation policies and programmes must therefore be designed in ways that help farmers overcome initial barriers to adoption of these practices, as well as to support farmers to sustain adoption over time. This may require longer-term funding horizons for adaptation programmes and innovative support mechanisms to incentivize sustained adoption.

Regional Developmentalism through Law Jonathan Bashi Rudahindwa, 2018-05-20

Offering a study of regionalism in Africa and investigating the ways in which law can be used to address the issues raised by regional processes on the continent, this book examines the African Economic Community, considering that it has been entrusted to coordinate and to harmonize policies between various Regional Economic Communities (RECs) across the continent, thereby influencing the continent's approach towards regional integration. It seeks to identify how law can be used to strengthen the African RECs while ensuring that they achieve their goal of promoting regional development across the continent. Drawing upon economic and political theories and using a critical doctrinal analysis of legal texts and norms, the book uncovers the legal and economic underpinnings of the model of regional integration followed by the regional schemes operating under the banner of the AEC, aiming to contribute to the search for effective methods to ensure the success of these various initiatives. Proposing the concept of Regional Developmentalism Through Law as the most suitable conceptual framework to support the effective establishment of an African Economic Community, this book will be of interest to researchers, academics, and policy makers interested in the correlation between law regional integration and development in Africa      Transitional Justice and the Arab Spring Kirsten J. Fisher, Robert Stewart, 2015-03-24 This book presents a varied and critical picture of how the Arab Spring demands a re examination and re conceptualization of issues of transitional justice It demonstrates how unique features of this wave of revolutions and popular protests that have swept the Arab world since December 2010 give rise to distinctive concerns and problems relative to transitional justice The contributors explore how these issues in turn add fresh perspective and nuance to the field more generally In so doing it explores fundamental questions of social justice reconstruction and healing in the context of the Arab Spring Including the perspectives of academics and practitioners Transitional Justice and the Arab Spring will be of considerable interest to those working on the politics of the Middle East normative political theory transitional justice international law international relations and human rights      *G.K.
