ABSTRACT

We examine how the concept of narrative has entered social work over the past 15 years, with special emphasis on research applications. Approaching our task from distinctive standpoints and locations, the article reviews definitions of narrative, criteria for 'good' enough narrative research, and patterns in social work journals. Our evaluation uncovered few studies, in contrast to the volume of narrative research in education, nursing and other practicing professions. Three exemplars of narrative inquiry – model research completed by social workers – show the knowledge for practice that can be produced with careful application of narrative methods, in all their diversity. Drawing on our respective locations and experiences, we cautiously suggest some reasons for the paucity of quality research in the USA, and greater representation in Europe.

Social Work As Narrative:

Social Work as Narrative Christopher Hall, 1997 This study offers a new approach to professional practice by considering the everyday activities of social workers as performances of storytelling and persuasion Social workers tell stories in which clients and professionals become characters in complex plots In reports files and conversations facts are not merely reported but cases are told by intriguing the reader and persuading important audiences using traditional narrative conventions At the same time Dr Hall turns the narrative analysis on his own writing In reflexive detours the researcher's claims and descriptions are treated as open to a similar textual analysis as those of the characters he studies Handling critical voices is a problem for both researchers and social workers Themes of social construction the theory of the reader and narrative analysis are developed from recent work in the sociology of science sociolinguistics and literary theory Issues of policy are also raised and links are made to other discursive approaches to the study of professions The study raises fundamental questions about professional work the nature of research and social theory
