

#1 Belief in the Divine Creation of Language

- Many societies throughout history believed that language was the gift of the gods to humans. The most familiar is found in Genesis 2:20, which tells us that the first man, Adam, gave names to all living creatures. This belief predicates that humans were created from the start with an innate capacity to use language.
- It can't be proven that language is as old as humans, but it is definitely true that language and human society are inseparable. Wherever humans exist language exists.
