

DEPZMAN Life Cut Short

A knife crime message that used music to cut through and reach young people

PROBLEM

Knife crime has risen to astronomical levels, with over 1,877 knife murders in the past 10 years. The Joshua Ribera Foundation educates young people about knife crime, so they needed to act.

INSIGHT

Young people weren't taking notice of government anti-knife crime campaigns. We needed a new approach to make an impact, so we decided to deliver our message in a way that spoke their language - through the medium of music.

IDEA

In 2018, up-and-coming rapper, Depzman, was killed by a knife. Using deepfake and audio manipulation we brought him back. The track "Life Cut Short" chronicled his rise to fame and his untimely death to deliver a powerful anti-knife crime message.

RESULTS

The track dropped on SBTV, the UK's leading urban music channel, getting 2 million views in 2 weeks - ensuring our message reached the audience that needed to hear it. The video was also rolled out across the BBC's TV network.

VIDEO

24,000 frames of Depzman's face were used to produce the deepfake which was applied to the music video, shot with a rapping body double.

AUDIO

4 hours of Depzman's music was processed and combined with 8 days of studio recording sessions to create the final 100 track.
