coteries As a result the child wandered around the periphery of the groups perhaps gleaning a word here and there in the conversations but was never allowed to participate Or else she simply leaned against the huge plane tree in the center of the yard or against the chain linked fence and stared with envy at the animated circles of youngsters who sometimes shrieked with laughter at some remark To start with most of her classmates had popular and contemporary Christian names such as Louane Manon Lola Lina or Chlo The girl s admittedly beautiful but ancient Celtic first name Gwendolynne was considered old fashioned and funny Unfortunately in these days of styles and rigid uniformity among children and adolescents her long mass of tightly curled carrotred hair her very round and freckled face and her chubbiness added to her out dated clothes ostracized her instantly her peers also laughed at her bulky homemade sweaters and her old scuffed shoes Discreetly Marine approached one of the chattiest groups in the schoolyard Among the laughing friends she had spotted one of her best students ABOUT THE AUTHOR Like many other Anglo Saxon children Brenda Lee O Ryan was brought up on stories of ghosts that rattle their chains and haunt Scottish castles of ladies in white holding high a lamp who roam the corridors of London homes and foretell imminent deaths and of malicious leprechauns those elves of the Irish forests who hide the shoes of disobedient children during moonless nights As a teenager she turned to the crime novels of elderly English ladies in which the investigations were led by private detectives sometimes of noble birth stylishly dressed with or without bowler hats who always found the assassin before the often incompetent police officers in frumpy clothes Once an adult she decided to write more contemporary whodunits that would combine the supernatural element that used to make her shiver as a child with her own type of investigator a sort of young attractive and modern Miss Marple in love with a no less attractive French police officer Brenda Lee O Ryan the pen name of a well known published author spent a great deal of her life in the United States She learned to speak French in Quebec and loved France which she discovered during her numerous trips to Europe One day she decided to set down her suitcases for good Today she lives in French Catalonia on the Mediterranean coast near Perpignan
