

Care for the care-giver

- Family members or others caring for a person with Alzheimer's have an extremely difficult and stressful job, which becomes harder as the disease progresses.
- Dementia caregivers spend significantly more time on care-giving than do people providing care for those with other types of illnesses.
- This type of care-giving also has a greater impact in terms of employment complications, caregiver strain, mental and physical health problems, time for leisure and other family members, and family conflict than do other types of care-giving.
- It is common for Alzheimer's care-givers to develop feelings of anger, resentment, guilt, and hopelessness, in addition to the sorrow they feel for their loved one and for themselves.
- Depression is an extremely common consequence of being a full-time caregiver for a person with Alzheimer's. Support groups are an important way to deal with the stress of care-giving.
