Tales of a Traveller Washington Irving,2020-05-13 The following adventures were related to me by the same nervous gentleman who told me the romantic tale of THE STOUT GENTLEMAN published in Bracebridge Hall It is very singular that although I expressly stated that story to have been told to me and described the very person who told it still it has been received as an adventure that happened to myself Now I protest I never met with any adventure of the kind I should not have grieved at this had it not been intimated by the author of Waverley in an introduction to his romance of Peveril of the Peak that he was himself the Stout Gentleman alluded to I have ever since been importuned by letters and questions from gentlemen and particularly from ladies without number touching what I had seen of the great unknown Now all this is extremely tantalizing It is like being congratulated on the high prize when one has drawn a blank for I have just as great a desire as any one of the public to penetrate the mystery of that very singular personage whose voice fills every corner of the world without any one being able to tell from whence it comes He who keeps up such a wonderful and whimsical incognito whom nobody knows and yet whom every body thinks he can swear to My friend the nervous gentleman also who is a man of very shy Retired habits complains that he has been excessively annoyed in consequence of its getting about in his neighborhood that he is the fortunate personage Insomuch that he has become a character of considerable notoriety in two or three country towns and has been repeatedly teased to exhibit himself at blue stocking parties for no other reason than that of being the gentleman who has had a glimpse of the author of Waverley     ... Irving's Tales of a Traveler Washington Irving, 1911
