Lillian Morris, and Other Stories Henryk Sienkiewicz ,2015-02-09 Example in this ebook I came to America in September 1849 said the captain and found myself in New Orleans which was half French at that time From New Orleans I went up the Mississippi to a great sugar plantation where I found work and good wages But since I was young in those days and full of daring sitting in one spot and writing annoyed me so I left that place soon and began life in the forest My comrades and I passed some time among the lakes of Louisiana in the midst of crocodiles snakes and mosquitoes We supported ourselves with hunting and fishing and from time to time floated down great numbers of logs to New Orleans where purchasers paid for them not badly in money Our expeditions reached distant places We went as far as Bloody Arkansas which sparsely inhabited even at this day was well nigh a pure wilderness then Such a life full of labors and dangers bloody encounters with pirates on the Mississippi and with Indians who at that time were numerous in Louisiana Arkansas and Tennessee increased my health and strength which by nature were uncommon and gave me also such knowledge of the plains that I could read in that great book not worse than any red warrior After the discovery of gold in California large parties of emigrants left Boston New York Philadelphia and other eastern cities almost daily and one of these thanks to my reputation chose me for leader or as we say captain I accepted the office willingly since wonders were told of California in those days and I had cherished thoughts of going to the Far West though without concealing from myself the perils of the journey At present the distance between New York and San Francisco is passed by rail in a week and the real desert begins only west of Omaha in those days it was something quite different Cities and towns which between New York and Chicago are as numerous as poppy seeds now did not exist then and Chicago itself which later on grew up like a mushroom after rain was merely a poor obscure fishing village not found on maps It was necessary to travel with wagons men and mules through a country quite wild and inhabited by terrible tribes of Indians Crows Blackfeet Pawnees Sioux and Arickarees which it was well nigh impossible to avoid in large numbers since those tribes movable as sand had no fixed dwellings but being hunters circled over great spaces of prairie while following buffaloes and antelopes Not few were the toils then that threatened us but he who goes to the Far West must be ready to suffer hardship and expose his life frequently

I feared most of all the responsibility which I had accepted This matter had been settled however and there was nothing to do but make preparations for the road These lasted more than two months since we had to bring wagons even from Pittsburgh to buy mules horses arms and collect large supplies of provisions Toward the end of winter however all things were ready I wished to start in such season as to pass the great prairies lying between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains in spring for I knew that in summer because of heat in those open places multitudes of men died of various diseases I decided for this reason to lead the train not over the southern route by St Louis but through Iowa Nebraska and Northern Colorado That road was more dangerous with reference to Indians but beyond doubt it was the healthier The plan roused opposition at first among people of the train I declared that if they would not obey they might choose another captain They yielded after a brief consultation and we moved at the first breath of spring To be continue in this ebook The Best Short Stories of ... and the Yearbook of the American Short Story ,1919 The Best American Short Stories and the Yearbook of the American
