The Associational State Brian Balogh, 2015-04-22

In the wake of the New Deal U S politics has been popularly imagined as an ongoing conflict between small government conservatives and big government liberals In practice narratives of left versus right or government versus the people do not begin to capture the dynamic ways Americans pursue civic goals while protecting individual freedoms Brian Balogh proposes a new view of U S politics that illuminates how public and private actors collaborate to achieve collective goals This associational synthesis treats the relationship between state and civil society as fluid and challenges interpretations that map the trajectory of American politics solely along ideological lines Rather both liberals and conservatives have extended the authority of the state but have done so most successfully when state action is mediated through nongovernmental institutions such as universities corporations interest groups and other voluntary organizations The Associational State provides a fresh perspective on the crucial role that the private sector trade associations and professional organizations have played in implementing public policies from the late nineteenth through the twenty first century Balogh examines key historical periods through the lens of political development paying particular attention to the ways government social movements and intermediary institutions have organized support and resources to achieve public ends Exposing the gap between the ideological rhetoric that both parties deploy today and their far less ideologically driven behavior over the past century and a half The Associational State offers one solution to the partisan gridlock that currently grips the nation

Collision Course Hugh Davis Graham, 2003-09-11

When the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1965 were passed they were seen as triumphs of liberal reform Yet today affirmative action is foundering in the great waves of immigration from Asia and Latin America leading to direct competition for jobs housing education and government preference programs In Collision Course Hugh Davis Graham explains how two such well intended laws came into conflict with each other when employers acting under affirmative action plans hired millions of new immigrants ushered in by the Immigration Act while leaving high unemployment among inner city blacks He shows how affirmative action for immigrants stirred wide resentment and drew new attention to policy contradictions Graham sees a troubled future for both programs As the economy weakens and antiterrorist border controls tighten the competition for jobs will intensify pressure on affirmative action and invite new restrictions on immigration Graham's insightful interpretation of the unintended consequences of these policies is original and controversial
