A Woman in the Great Outdoors Melody Webb, 2007-10-16 Melody Webb's reflections on her twenty five year long career in the National Park Service is an insider's account of a public bureaucracy As a woman she was working in a male dominated agency as an idealist she attempted to champion the wise use of the national parks in a pragmatic political agency Webb's career began in Alaska during President Gerald Ford's administration She helped set up the mechanism that permitted Alaskan Natives to claim up to 2 million acres of federal land to preserve culturally significant areas Following a dozen years of historic preservation work in Alaska and New Mexico Webb spent the second half of her tenure in management positions She served as superintendent at the Lyndon B Johnson National Historical Park and then as assistant superintendent in charge of all park operations at Grand Teton National Park During this period the Park Service was faced with conflicting mandates there was a growing demand for recreational land use and at the same time environmental requirements and tight budgets limited the NPS's options Webb's frankness about the day to day politics within an institution that many Americans feel should be above politics make this book an eye opener for historians and anyone who has an interest in the National Park System
