translating large scale processes into local cultures Anthropologists have been sensitive to the intimate tragic and lyrical senses of local place But their theorising has been too much bound up with cosmology and insufficiently with the intermediate scales of state and local state In this book Stephan Feuchtwang and his contributors offer a set of historical anthropological and scale mediated studies from China a country that includes a subcontinental variety of cultures and landscapes In the twentieth century it experienced collapse in civil war and was then reasserted as a particularly strong state Now it is managing the fastest growing capitalist economy in the world These intriguing Chinese studies contribute to the anthropology of place and space providing an historical perspective on processes of change and of accommodation to disruption The stories they tell are fascinating in their own right but in addition the result is a critical reformulation of previous theories of place that geographers philosophers historians and anthropologists will find of great interest

Our Players' Gallery W. J. Thorold, Arthur Hornblow, Arthur Hornblow (Jr.), Perriton Maxwell, Stewart Beach, 1926 Hygiene, Sociality, and Culture in Contemporary Rural China Lili Lai, 2025-10-01 This book presents a new perspective on attempts by the contemporary Chinese government to transform the diverse conditions found in countless rural villages into what the state's social welfare program deems socialist new villages Lili Lai argues that an ethnographic focus on the specifics of village life can help destabilize China's persistent rural urban divide and help contribute to more effective welfare intervention to improve health and hygienic conditions of village life
