Problem of Evil

The first part of the paper is a discussion on evil and suffering. The second part is the proposed solution on how to deal with evil and suffering. In John Hick's book entitled Philosophy of Religion he devoted a chapter on the problem of evil. He states that this is a theological problem for those who believe that a loving God exists. If God is evil then Hick's proposition is useless. But it can be argued that most believers in the Jewish, Christian, and even Islam religions believe that God is good. Thus, Hick was justified in saying that the existence of evil in this world is a problematic phenomenon for these believers.

Hick said that some tried to excuse the existence of evil as an imaginary thing. But the author countered that even in the Christian Bible it is clear that evil is real. The Bible records "every kind of sorrow and suffering, every mode of 'man's inhumanity to man' and of our painfully insecure existence in the world" (Hick, p.77). He then added, "There can be no doubt, then, that for biblical faith evil is entirely real and no sense an illusion" (Hick, p.77). Once this issue of evil has been settled then it is time to find an explanation and perhaps a solution.

Hick said that there are three major responses to the existence of evil. He said that the first one is centered on the idea on the fall of man, from an original state of righteousness to something that is less than ideal and therefore mankind is now capable of inflicting evil unto himself and unto God's creation. The second view is what he called the Irenaean response and it is the belief that evil and suffering are God's tools of perfecting a still imperfect world (Hick, p.78). The third one is the idea that God is not that powerful and therefore he has no ability to deal with the problem of evil and suffering.
