Long before the first people came to live in this area, the land was covered in a dense forest of trees and shrubs. The area was a natural habitat for many animals, including deer, wild boar, and wild birds. The first people to live in this area were Neolithic farmers who lived in small villages and grew crops like wheat and barley. They also hunted animals for food and used the bones to make tools.

Over time, the area became more developed and the population grew. The first people to live in this area were Neolithic farmers who lived in small villages and grew crops like wheat and barley. They also hunted animals for food and used the bones to make tools.
