

A photograph of a park with many bare trees and a wooden bench in the foreground. The trees are tall and thin, with no leaves, and the ground is covered in fallen leaves. The bench is made of wood and is positioned in the lower left of the frame. The overall scene is somewhat somber and quiet.

Diagnostic and Therapeutic Challenges in Rare and Complex Autoimmune Diseases Savino Sciascia, Chi Chiu Mok, Roccatello, 2022-05-05 Inadvertent Modification of the Immune Response Irvin M. Asher, 1980

The Metabolic Challenges of Immune Cells in Health and Disease Claudio Mauro, Christian Frezza, 2015-07-13 Obesity and its co morbidities including atherosclerosis insulin resistance and diabetes are a world wide epidemic Inflammatory immune responses in metabolic tissues have emerged as a universal feature of these metabolic disorders While initial work highlighted the contribution of macrophages to tissue inflammation and insulin resistance recent studies demonstrate that cells of the adaptive immune compartment including T and B lymphocytes and dendritic cells also participate in obesity induced pathogenesis of these conditions However the molecular and cellular pathways by which the innate and adaptive branches of immunity control tissue and systemic metabolism remain poorly understood To engage in growth and activation cells need to increase their biomass and replicate their genome This process presents a substantial bioenergetic challenge growing and activated cells must increase ATP production and acquire or synthesize raw materials including lipids proteins and nucleic acids To do so they actively reprogram their intracellular metabolism from catabolic mitochondrial oxidative phosphorylation to glycolysis and other anabolic pathways This metabolic reprogramming is under the control of specific signal transduction pathways whose underlying molecular mechanisms and relevance to physiology and disease are subject of considerable current interest and under intense study Recent reports have elucidated the physiological role of metabolic reprogramming in macrophage and T cell activation and differentiation B and dendritic cell biology as well as in the crosstalk of immune cells with endothelial and stem cells It is also becoming increasingly evident that alterations of metabolic pathways play a major role in the pathogenesis of chronic inflammatory disorders Due to the scientific distance between immunologists and experts in metabolism e g clinicians and biochemists however there has been limited cross talk between these communities This collection of articles aims at promoting such cross talk and accelerating discoveries in the emerging field of immunometabolism Challenges Associated with Identifying Preclinical Animal Models for the Development of Immune-based Therapies Rajan P.
