Constructing strata of primary sampling units for the Residential Energy Consumption Survey Rachel M.
Harter, Pinliang (Patrick) Chen, Joseph P. McMichael, Edgardo S. Cureg, Samson A. Adeshiyan, Katherine B. Morton, 2017-05-26
The 2015 Residential Energy Consumption Survey design called for stratification of primary sampling units to improve estimation Two methods of defining strata from multiple stratification variables were proposed leading to this investigation All stratification methods use stratification variables available for the entire frame We reviewed textbook guidance on the general principles and desirable properties of stratification variables and the assumptions on which the two methods were based Using principal components combined with cluster analysis on the stratification variables to define strata focuses on relationships among stratification variables Decision trees regressions and correlation approaches focus more on relationships between the stratification variables and prior outcome data which may be available for just a sample of units Using both principal components cluster analysis and decision trees we stratified primary sampling units for the 2009 Residential Energy Consumption Survey and compared the resulting strata Surveys in Social Research David de Vaus, 2013-01-11 This work provides advice on how to plan conduct and analyze social surveys It emphasizes the links between theory and research the logic and interpretation of statistics and the practices of social research The fifth edition includes a new chapter on ethics and a glossary It assumes no background in statistical analysis and gives readers the tools they need to come to grips with this often confusing field Survey Sampling and Multivariables Peter R. Christopher, 1979 findings Introduction to Survey Sampling Graham Kalton, 2020-04-01 Sample design is key to all surveys fundamental to data collection and to the analysis and interpretation of the data Introduction to Survey Sampling Second Edition provides an authoritative and accessible source on sample design strategies and procedures that is a required reading for anyone collecting or analyzing survey data Graham Kalton discusses different types of probability samples stratification pre and post clustering dual frames replicates response base weights design effects and effective sample size It is a thorough revision and update of the first edition published more than 35 years ago Although the concepts of probability sampling are largely the same there have been important developments in the application of these concepts as research questions have increasingly spanned multiple disciplines computers have become central to data collection as well as data analysis and cell phones have become ubiquitous but response rates have fallen and public willingness to engage in survey research has waned While most of the volume focuses on probability samples there is also a chapter on nonprobability samples which are becoming increasingly important with the rise of social media and the world wide web
