metropole too. Identifications with racial whiteness did not disappear in England in the moment of decolonization; they came alive again fuelled by memories of what whiteness had once represented, recalling the empire as a lost racial utopia.

capitalist context as a lifestyle choice rather than the consequence of diminishing choice in the face of what has become a long term housing crisis What does this mean for how we live in the long term and is there a dark side to the promise of a simpler more sustainable home life Shrinking Domesticities brings together research from across the social sciences planning and architecture to explore these issues From co living developments to the Tiny House Movement self storage units to practices of de stuffification and drawing on examples from across Europe North America and Australasia the authors of this volume seek to understand both what micro living is bringing to our societies and what it may be eroding
