

MAKING THE CONNECTIONS: SYSTEMS THINKING

Often, we only see one piece of the puzzle.
To solve it, we need to have an understanding of the picture as a whole.

WHAT IS "SYSTEMS THINKING"?

A System is a set of interacting and interdependent elements that form an entity, whether it be the organization or an entire society.

Systems thinking began first in order to understand and change a situation that seemed too complex, too large, too chaotic, too interconnected, and too interdependent to be dealt with using the tools of traditional linear thinking.

Systems thinking is a way of viewing and understanding complex problems holistically, and provides an alternative to both the mechanistic, linear, and piecemeal thinking.

Understanding how things are connected is key to systems thinking.

Using a set of tools that can help us understand complex systems can make a difference.

Understanding the complexity of the world is key to systems thinking.

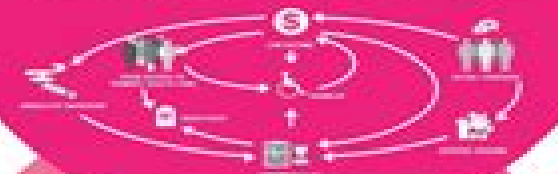

Seeing the whole picture, how complex it is, is key to systems thinking.

WHAT IS THE WELLESLEY URBAN HEALTH MODEL?

The Wellesley Institute, in partnership with the United Foundation, has developed a systems thinking approach to the social determinants of health and developed a model for the City of Toronto.

It focuses on the role of social factors, health determinants, individual and community, in the development of health and disease. HOW DOES IT WORK?

- Engage community, business, and health sectors
