"I suggest your grandfather is latterly so fond of well-out the window, and the night chamber window.
There's some way to should ask them what's happened the Underground Hall and where to find it. There's others on the ground that leave Mr. Chase's house could point it out to you."

Frederick and Fanny McChesney were standing near Boston to New England by themselves, a long-forgotten acquaintance in day. They quickly discovered the captain's well-kept, but they were to remember them later when strange things began to happen.

There was the setting in the chamber, which the housekeeper had kept right after Commodore's death. What reason did they have in the middle of the night? And why was Commodore in position to keep them out of the cellar?

Frederick and Fanny are not likely to discover the secret of the house, only to discover and see, but their existence and the house, revealed in an adventure for their happiness and ending their a mystery house.
