

aspect would probably also have a negative impact on the development of the economy due to the limitations both in production capacities and in spending by the population. This factor would also inevitably affect the areas of STEM, especially science, technology, and engineering. The limited availability of synthetic fabrics would prevent the creation of many civil inventions and would also slow down the development of culture. On the other hand, society would be able to maintain a craving for complex products with a certain utilitarian and artistic value.

This scenario assumes that the development of STEM domains should serve the benefit of the whole society. At the same time, it should be noted that achievements in these areas also often occur within the framework of certain events and for certain purposes. In this case, people should pay attention to specific materials and inventions and try to rethink their possible applications. Probably the many advances in science and technology that are currently available in a limited circle can be used to meet the needs of a wide audience. Thus, STEM should serve global progress and directly affect the daily life of people.
