hovered a shadow that was neither hood of dust nor hue of gold It was not physical but lonely waiting prophetic and weird No wild desert of wastelands once the home of other races of man and now gone to decay and death could have shown so barren an acreage Half of this wandering patchwork of squares was earth brown and gray curried and disked and rolled and combed and harrowed with not a tiny leaf of green in all the miles The other half had only a faint golden promise of mellow harvest and at long distance it seemed to shimmer and retreat under the hot sun A singularly beautiful effect of harmony lay in the long slowly rising slopes in the rounded hills in the endless curving lines on all sides The scene was heroic because of the labor of horny hands it was sublime because not a hundred harvests nor three generations of toiling men could ever rob nature of its limitless space and scorching sun and sweeping dust of its resistless age long creep back toward the desert that it had been
