Objective: The aim of this study is to assess the impact of educational interventions on knowledge and attitudes toward HIV/AIDS, with the goal of reducing stigma.

Methodic: A cross-sectional epidemiological study was conducted. This intervention study assessed knowledge and attitudes about HIV/AIDS using a 5-point Likert scale. Participants, selected by convenience sampling method, included patients, their relatives, and healthcare providers at a University Hospital, excluding those with HIV/AIDS. After completing a pre-test questionnaire, participants received written information from an infectious disease specialist on HIV/AIDS, covering prevalence, transmission, prevention, and treatment per WHO guidelines. A post-test was then administered to evaluate changes in knowledge and attitudes. The study used a validated Turkish attitude scale. Statistical analysis was performed using SPSS 23.0. Continuous variables were presented as mean $\pm$ standard deviation or median and range. Correlation analysis examined the relationship between HIV/AIDS knowledge and stigmatizing attitudes.

Results: In the study conducted with 388 participants, the mean age was 34, with 48.7% male and 51.3% female. Education significantly increased HIV/AIDS knowledge and improved empathetic, accepting attitudes toward individuals living with HIV ($p < 0.05$).

Conclusion: These results suggest that educational interventions should be implemented widely, especially in healthcare settings, to combat stigma. Future actions could include integrating similar programs into routine training for healthcare workers, patient education initiatives, and community outreach. Expanding the approach to other regions and monitoring long-term effects would further support stigma reduction.

Introduction

Currently, HIV/AIDS treatment has made remarkable strides, transforming the disease from a fatal condition to a manageable chronic illness. Advances in antiretroviral therapy (ART) now allow people with HIV to live long, healthy lives with near-normal life expectancies.¹

Effective ART can also reduce viral loads to undetectable levels, preventing transmission (U=U: undetectable = untransmittable).² Despite these developments, HIV/AIDS continues to be a major public health problem, especially in low- and middle-income countries such as Türkiye. There are many reasons for this; stigma is one of the important reasons.³

HIV-related stigma describes negative beliefs, feelings, attitudes and perceptions towards people living with HIV (PLHIV).⁴ Examples of stigmatizing attitudes include viewing HIV-positive individuals as cursed, sinful, or dirty, refusing friendships, advocating for their isolation from society and work. Such behaviors can lead to feelings of loneliness, shame, and social isolation in those living with HIV. This view of life and continued discrimination may cause these patients to experience discrimination, exclusion, unemployment, economic and social collapse, and lead to mental health disorders such as depression, deterioration in mental health and suicide. In addition, consequences such as not getting tested and avoiding treatment due to stigma cause the disease to become more
