Foreign Direct Investment and Human Development Olivier de Schutter, Johan F. M. Swinnen, Jan Wouters, 2013 This book presents original research that examines the growth of international investment agreements as a means to attract foreign direct investment FDI and considers how this affects the ability of capital importing countries to pursue their development goals The hope of countries signing such treaties is that foreign capital will accelerate transfers of technologies create employment and benefit the local economy through various types of linkages But do international investment agreements in fact succeed in attracting foreign direct investment And if so are the sovereignty costs involved worth paying In particular are these costs such that they risk undermining the very purpose of attracting investors which is to promote human development in the host country This book uses both economic and legal analysis to answer these questions that have become central to discussions on the impact of economic globalization on human rights and human development It explains the dangers of developing countries being tempted to signal their willingness to attract investors by providing far reaching protections to investors rights that would annul or at least seriously diminish the benefits they have a right to expect from the arrival of FDI It examines a variety of tools that could be used by capital exporting countries and by capital importing countries alike to ensure that FDI works for development and that international investment agreements contribute to that end This uniquely interdisciplinary study located at the intersection of development economics international investment law and international human rights is written in an accessible language and should attract the attention of anyone who cares about the role of private investment in supporting the efforts of poor countries to climb up the development ladder Export Credit Agencies Delio E.

Gianturco,2001-06-30 Gianturco examines the roles played by export credit agencies ECAs which are specialized financial institutions that cover some 1 trillion of exports each year In terms of their financial impact on international trade these agencies are unsurpassed but rarely do they receive attention in the financial press or broader recognition In this book Gianturco uncovers the ECAs revealing and explaining their history role functions and controversies regarding their missions There are currently some 90 countries with official ECAs two thirds of these countries can be classified as developing or transitional nations the remainder include the major developed countries ECAs provide loans guarantees insurance and other financial services to their particular nation s exporters and foreign direct investors Their contribution to national growth and development both in the United States and abroad is significant and the special nature of their operations makes them essential to the welfare of countless businesses worldwide Essential reading for business professionals scholars researchers and students involved with international business and economic development Official Supported Export Credits

Developments and Prospects International Monetary Fund,1990-03-01 This paper presents report on a number of countries in Asia that have made substantial use of agency credits including the quasi concessional financing available through mixed credit s Through their willingness to grant comprehensive relief on a case by case basis official creditors have responded flexibly to the needs of individual countries The ability of export credit agencies to also provide substantial new financing to rescheduling countries has depended on the strategy of debt subordination achieved through fixing cutoff dates As to the role of export credits at present when the debt strategy s continuing emphasis on new money flows is being supplemented by debt reduction the debt subordination strategy followed by export credit agencies has left them well positioned to provide necessary new financing for middle income countries pursuing strong adjustment In heavily indebted low income countries whose needs for project finance should most appropriately be met by concessional finance export credit
