

The East Coast Main Line Since 1925

K. HOOLE

The past five decades have seen a remarkable transformation of train services on the East Coast Main Line's middle section, between Doncaster and Newcastle. In 1925 Pacific power had only just begun to make its mark on the principal express services and maximum speeds in excess of 75mph were uncommon. Secondary main line stopping and branch line passenger services were frequent and sported a fascinating variety of motive power. Today the 'Deltic' diesel-hauled Inter-City expresses run long stretches of the journey at a continuous 100mph and the 125mph High Speed Train is just around the corner. Such stopping and branch passenger services as survive are mostly covered by standardised diesel multiple-units.

No observer has kept closer watch on this transition than Kenneth Hoole, the premier historian of all railway things North Eastern. From his copious records he has produced a fascinating and detailed chronology, five years at a time, of the developing scene. The transition from one type of locomotive to another on principal services, major changes in the allocation of specific locomotive types and the evolution of both passenger and freight services — all are recorded in a style that will absorb and delight the railway enthusiast. The text is supported by a superb array of many rare photographs from Kenneth Hoole's extensive collection.
