CHAPTER I THE PROBLEM AND ITS BACKGROUND

Introduction

Community policing has enabled constant monitoring and surveillance of the communities through the mutual cooperation of the people and the police bringing down the crime rates such as burglary, thefts, robberies, rape, drug trafficking, assault, abductions and domestic violence. The public has taken the responsibility of guarding their neighborhood and reporting any bizarre individuals and activities in the community. Such endeavor are only possible in the people are willing to guard themselves and remit any information to the police (MacDonald, 2002). According to him, both law enforcement agencies and the citizen living in the community needs to work together for the common good of the community.

Community policing has emerged as a prominent strategy in modern law enforcement, aiming to foster collaborative efforts between law enforcement agencies and local communities. The core principle of community policing is to establish strong relationship and mutual trust between the police officers and the community with the ultimate goal is to reduce the crime rate and to enhance the public safety.

The central tenet of Community policing is community involvement in solving community problems, including crime. Previous research into the effectiveness of the community policing could not identify robust, one-tailed results on the crime reduction. However, findings suggest that community policing may have a positive effect on the citizen satisfaction, fear of crime and trust in the police (Weisburd & Eck, 2004; Skogan, 2004).
