Walter good bye Walter dear good bye and the last note of this chorus was Dood bye from a blue eyed fair haired girl of two years as Walter disengaged his arms from his mother s neck and sprang into the carriage which had already been waiting a quarter of an hour to convey him and his luggage to the station It is the old old story Mr Evson was taking his son to a large public school and this was the first time that Walter had left home Nearly every father who deigns to open this little book has gone through the scene himself and he and his sons will know from personal experience the thoughts and sensations and memories which occupied the minds of Walter Evson and his father as the carriage drove through the garden gate and the village street bearing the eldest boy of the young family from the sacred and quiet shelter of a loving home to a noisy and independent life among a number of strange and young companions St. Winifred's, Or the World of School Harold C.

Earnshaw, 2017-06-28 Walter s Home The merry homes of England Around their hearths by night What gladsome looks of household love Meet in the ruddy light Mrs Hemans Good bye Walter good bye Walter dear good bye and the last note of this chorus was Dood bye from a blue eyed fair haired girl of two years as Walter disengaged his arms from his mother s neck and sprang into the carriage which had already been waiting a quarter of an hour to convey him and his luggage to the station It is the old old story Mr Evson was taking his son to a large public school and this was the first time that Walter had left home Nearly every father who deigns to open this little book has gone through the scene himself and he and his sons will know from personal experience the thoughts and sensations and memories which occupied the minds of Walter Evson and his father as the carriage drove through the garden gate and the village street bearing the eldest boy of the young family from the sacred and quiet shelter of a loving home to a noisy and independent life among a number of strange and young companions If you have ever stood on the hill from which Walter caught a last glimpse of the home he was leaving and waved his final farewell to his mother you are not likely to have forgotten the scene which was then spread before your eyes On the right hand side the low hills covered with firs rise in gentle slopes one over the other till they reach the huge green shoulder of a mountain around whose summits the clouds are generally weaving their awful and ever changing diadem To the left between the road and a lower range of wooded undulations is a deep and retired glen through which a mountain stream babbles along its hurried course tumbling sometimes in a noisy cataract and rushing wildly through the rough boulder stones which it has carried from the heights or deepening into some quiet pool bright and smooth as glass on the margin of which the great purple loosestrife and the long fern leaves bend down as though to gaze at their own reflected beauty In front and at your feet opens a rich valley which is almost filled as far as the roots of the mountains by a lovely lake Beside this lake the white houses of a little village cluster around the elevation on which the church and churchyard stand while on either shore rising among the fir groves that overshadow the first swellings of the hills are a few sequestered villas commanding a prospect of rare beauty and giving a last touch of interest to the surrounding view In one of these houses that one with the crowded gables not a hundred feet above the lake opposite to which you see the swans pluming their wings in the sunlight and the green boat in its little boathouse lived the hero of our story and no boy could have had a dearer or lovelier home His father Mr Evson was a man in easy and almost in affluent circumstances who having no regular occupation had chosen for himself this quiet retreat and devoted all his time and care to the education of his family and the ordinary duties of a country gentleman
