THE CHILD'S CONCEPTION OF THE WORLD

The subject of this investigation—one of the most important but also one of the most difficult in child psychology, is: What conceptions of the world does the child naturally form at the different stages of its development? To what extent does he distinguish the external world from an internal or subjective world and what limits does he draw between his self and objective reality? These are the questions which make up the first problem, the child's notion of reality.

A second fundamental problem is the significance of explanations put forward by the child. What use does he make of the notions of cause and of law? Is the form of explanation presented by the child of a new type? These and like questions form the second problem, the child's notion of causality. These two questions of what reality and causality mean to the child are the subject of this book.

The Child's Conception of Space Jean Piaget, 1948 The Child's Conception of the World Jean Piaget, 1971 The Child's Conception of Space Jean Piaget, Bärbel Inhelder, 1956 The Child's Conception of Number Jean Piaget, 1952 Professor Piaget discusses a set of investigations he and a team of co-workers carried out on the genesis of the notion of number in the child's mind By asking questions freely they were able to gather valuable statements from children about the actions they were asked to perform with experimental objects Beginning with the hypothesis that the construction of number goes hand in hand with the development of logic the research team set out to diagnose developing number relevant capabilities more basic than those involved in counting and routine primary school number work The aim was to study the essential properties of the number system and the underlying assumptions which adults make about the behavior of numbers The first experiments dealt with the child's ability to grasp the ideas of conservation of quantity and conservation of number These led to investigations on the ability to coordinate corresponding sets and a study of the cardinal and ordinal aspects of numbers and their interrelationships The final experiments dealt with the child's growing awareness of basic additive and multiplicative properties of numbers Piaget sees classes relations and numbers as cognitive domains which develop in an intertwined mutually dependent way From these experiments he concludes that number is organized stage after stage in close connection with the gradual elaboration of systems of inclusions hierarchy of logical classes and systems of asymmetrical relations qualitative seriations the sequence of numbers thus resulting from an operational synthesis of classification and seriation The Child's Conception of Time Jean Piaget, 1969 Translation of Le développement de la notion de temps chez l'enfant The Child's Conception of the World (Classic Reprint) Jean Piaget, 2017-05-18 Excerpt from The Child's Conception of the World Hence it is not merely useful but essential first to examine the methods to be employed in studying these beliefs To judge of the logic of children it is often enough simply to talk with them or to observe them among themselves To arrive at their beliefs requires a special method which it must be confessed outright is not only difficult and tedious but demands also an outlook the fruit of at least one or two full years training Mental specialists trained in clinical practice will immediately appreciate the reason In order to assess a child's statement at its true worth the most minute precautions are necessary Some account of these precautions must now be given since if the reader ignores them he is likely to falsify completely the meaning of the pages which follow and moreover to mismanage the experiments should he
