Abstract— This research aimed to gather data on the perceived effects of modular distance learning on students. The following research objectives informed this research: 1) to determine the perceived effects of modular distance learning on the students and 2) to determine the significant difference in the perceived effects of modular distance learning on grades 4,5 and 6 students. This quantitative study employed a descriptive survey to determine and identify the perceived effects of modular distance learning on grades 4,5 and 6 students. The research instrument used in this study is a survey questionnaire, which is used to acquire the necessary data. Based on the result, the study revealed that students agreed on using modular distance learning as a teaching method. They agreed most with the statements and the benefits of this approach. The study also revealed no significant difference in the perceived effects of modular distance learning on students when categorized according to gender. This means that students had the same perceptions when categorized according to gender. However, the study also revealed a significant difference in the perceived effects of modular distance learning on the students when categorized according to their grade level. It means that students had a different perception when they were grouped according to their grade level. Therefore, researchers concluded that in terms of gender, modular distance learning was not affected by their perception of the modular approach. At the same time, the perception of the students had a difference in terms of their grade level. This study implies that this modular distance learning approach helps students improve their perception of modules. Therefore, a modular approach must be continued in face-to-face instruction even if the pandemic vanishes. Researchers may recommend to the faculty/teachers in Aumbay Elementary School to use modules so students can study in advance; teachers/faculty might monitor their student's progress and be more flexible and even-minded in any situation to provide and help the students. Moreover, Schools may provide guidelines regarding the implementation of limited face-to-face and modular distance learning so that students can learn in different approaches; parents should also give attention to their children and support them in such activities. Furthermore, future researchers may incorporate other variables when they conduct a study related to our research.

I. INTRODUCTION

Modular learning is a form of distance learning that uses self-learning modules (SLM) based on the essential learning competencies (MELCS) provided by DepEd. A modular distance learning approach would be more effective than the other approach (Parey & Martin, 2018), which Nardo (2017) mentioned that modules encourage independent study.

The COVID-19 pandemic at Huanan Seafood Market in Wuhan, China, in December 2019, within a month, it has turned out to be a global health crisis. The COVID-19 pandemic resulted in widespread disruptions such as travel restrictions, school closures, and global economic recession. The educational setup has changed, wherein instead of physical classes, the Department of Education (DepEd) has implemented distance or remote learning. They implemented numerous distance learning modalities such as; printed modules, online learning, tv or radio-based instruction, and other modalities that the teachers and students used in their distance classes.

Schools are the main places where students can enjoy and, simultaneously, improve or develop their skills, abilities, and cognitive levels. Troveta (2020) states that students experience difficulty adjusting to the implementation of modular distance learning, wherein they struggle to study because of the lack of physical guidance and interactions with their teachers. Aside from that, students do not have the same levels of understanding, and not all students are equally intelligent when it comes to the different module lessons when doing self-study at home.

In line with the above discussion, many students are struggling in their learning using modules, wherein most of the students cannot complete the activities in their modules and cannot do their performance tasks due to the significant number of activities and many exercises, as well as due to the lack of guidance and instructions from their teachers. That is why researchers conducted this study to know and identify if there are perceived effects of modular distance learning on the students and to determine if there is a significant difference in the Perceived Effects of Modular Distance Learning on the Students when categorized according to gender and grade level in Aumbay Elementary School.

A. Statement of the Problem

This study aims to identify and determine the significant Perceived Effects of Modular Distance Learning on Students in Aumbay Elementary School. It specifically aims to answer the following questions:

- 1) What are the perceived effects of modular distance learning on the students in Aumbay Elementary School?
- 2) Is there a significant difference in the perceived effects of modular distance learning on the students when they are categorized according to:
