Abstract

Representation of the enduring impact of memory on the fictional characters' minds has a crucial function in the construction of narrative plots in Ian McEwan's oeuvre. The construction of story world in McEwan's most recent novel Lessons (2022) is based on the abiding impact of memory on the central character's mental functioning throughout a long period of time. Storytelling in Lessons is tantamount to memory and acts of remembering. McEwan highlights the centrality of memory in Lessons by using a retrospective mode of narration. The third person narrator primarily traces the long-lasting effects of two formative experiences on Roland Baines's mind and behaviour throughout his entire life. However, his recollections and acts of remembering, as recounted and reported through the narrator's mediating perspective, ultimately fail to resolve Roland's inner turmoil. Rather, by revisiting two people whose memories have long troubled him, he revises his own memories, which greatly helps him to come to terms with his past. Therefore, as this paper argues, while consecutive acts of remembering in Lessons largely confine the central character to the limited atmosphere of his own perspective, his dialogues with two women from his life about their shared experiences foster his ability to adopt different perspectives and reframe his perception of himself and the others.

1. Introduction

The contemporary British novelist Ian McEwan (b. 1948) is a European writer in the sense that he consistently explores the profound impact of remembering in his oeuvre. In Suzanne Nalbantian's words: "A remembering human subject stands out in Western literature" (1). The act of remembering has a crucial function in the construction of narrative plots as much as in the formation and functioning of the characters' consciousness in McEwan's novels. McEwan achieves the impact of past events on the characters' present moment perceptions through retrospective mode of narration, which is nearly a standard practice in narrative representations. The characters' remembering process allows them to modify and revise their perspectives towards their lives through reviewing and re-examining their experiences at different stages in their past. To put it otherwise, the act of remembering is a prime aspect of the contemplating fictional minds in McEwan's fiction. Memory, therefore, changes into their device to overcome the splitting nature of time. Memory simultaneously connects characters to their past and formulates the construction of their identity in the present time. Memory in McEwan's fiction mostly transforms the central characters' lives from a linear order into a circular one.

Concern with memory and remembering acts are recurring themes in McEwan's fiction. Memory plays a central role in the construction of both narrative plots and fictional characters in his works. In Imogene Ash's words, "McEwan uses memory in his novels as a form of control for his narrator, as the information that is recalled in a reconstructive narrative" and "is highly selective." Reviewers of McEwan's fiction also highlight the centrality of the past and the acts of remembering in McEwan's

The Philosophy of Force Christopher J Finlay, 2025-05-06 The Philosophy of Force presents a highly original republican theory of just war Taking its inspiration from historic wars against slavery and colonialism it offers an account of the ethics of defensive violence shaped around the perspective of those oppressed by empire and other forms of social and political domination Whereas the most intuitive cases of just war are often thought to be those fought against mass killing more can be learnt about the ethics of violence by focusing on wars against mass domination wars like the slave revolt in Saint Domingue that gave birth to Haiti and the American Civil War's emancipation of enslaved people By contrast with liberal cosmopolitan ethics this book argues that the right analytical starting point for thinking about war and political violence is the use of lethal force to defend against enslavement not the defence of lives against attempted murder Enslavement highlights the importance of dominating power as a facet of all violent threats and illuminates more fully than other types of threat the intimate relationships between violence vulnerability and social domination Building a republican account of war ethics around this insight helps identify distinctively political dimensions of violence that are otherwise apt to be overlooked

It provides a compelling basis for understanding the legitimacy of armed defence against a wide range of threats some lethal some not      The Ambivalence of Power in the Twenty-First Century Economy Vadim Radaev,Zoya
