

Executive Summary

THE U.S. SYSTEM for protecting people who volunteer to participate in research is widely perceived to need improvement. A major concern is that the linchpins of the protection system—institutional review boards (IRBs)—are overloaded and underfunded and so may not be able to adequately protect participants from harm in high-risk research, such as clinical trials of experimental drugs.

Three other concerns—often voiced about research in the social, behavioral, and economic sciences (SBES), but generally applicable to human participant protection—are important. The first is that the review process too often focuses on documenting consent to participate in research so as to satisfy the letter of federal requirements, when IRBs and researchers instead need to focus on developing the most effective processes for helping individuals reach an informed, voluntary decision about participation. The second concern is that IRBs, researchers, and the entire human participant protection system may pay too little attention to the challenge of countering increasing threats to the confidentiality of research data because of technological and other changes, such as the ability to readily access and link large databases through the Internet. The third concern is that the review process may delay research or impair the integrity of research designs, without necessarily improving participant protection, because the type of review is not commensurate with risk—for example, full board review for minimal-risk research that uses such methods as surveys, structured interviews, participant observation, laboratory experiments, and analyses of existing data.

PANEL CHARGE AND SCOPE

The Panel on Institutional Review Boards, Surveys, and Social Science Research was established by the Committee on National Statistics and the Board on Behavioral, Cognitive, and Sensory Sciences, both standing committees of the National Academies' National Research Council. The panel was charged to examine the structure, function, and performance of the IRB system as it relates to SBES research and to recommend research and practice to improve the system.
