North Carolina Natives The First People of North Carolina

Archaeologists believe that Paleo Indians were the first people to live in North Carolina. Paleo comes from a Greek word meaning "very old." These Native Americans came here around ten to twelve thousand years ago. Paleo Indians were hunters and gatherers who lived in small groups of only ten or twenty people. They were often called "happier" because they were not trapped here by Americans in the past.

① Paleo Indians were hunters and gatherers. They lived in small groups of only ten or twenty people. They were often called "happier" because they were not trapped here by Americans in the past.

As time passed, Paleo Indians began to live in one place for a long time. They began to grow crops and raise animals.

North Carolina Natives: The First People

They often settled near glacial lakes. These were lakes left behind by large bodies of ice, melted at the end of the Ice Age. Villages, food, tools, and other supplies were readily available.

Paleo Indians were hunters, fishermen, and gatherers. They lived in small groups of only ten or twenty people. They were often called "happier" because they were not trapped here by Americans in the past.

② During the winter months, the Paleo Indians depended on three "staples." These crops were corn, beans, and squash. These three crops were often grown together. This is called the "Three Sisters." The corn provides a ladder for the beans to climb. The beans provide the ground for the squash to grow. The squash protects the other two crops from insects.
