

The Panama Canal

The Panama Canal is an artificial waterway that connects the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans. The canal was built across the isthmus of Panama. An isthmus is a strip of land with the ocean on both sides. The Panama Canal was built to allow ships to carry cargo or goods around the world in less time and for less money. Before the canal, ships had to sail around all of South America. The canal helped improve the world economy.

Panama was chosen because it was a very narrow strip of land that divided the two oceans. Panama was the easiest and best location to build such a canal. France began building the Panama Canal in 1881. France failed twice because of workers getting sick and construction problems. In 1904, the United States took over the project. It took the United States ten years to build the canal. The Panama Canal officially opened on August 15, 1914.

Thousands of workers worked hard to build the canal. Laborers fought off diseases from mosquitoes, mudslides, and dangerous living conditions during construction. There were three main parts of the construction efforts. Building the locks was an engineering miracle at the time. Huge locks on either side of the canal lift boats up and down to get them through the canal. The locks work by raising and lowering the water levels inside the locks to raise and lower boats. The locks lift ships up to 85 feet high in parts of the canal.

Part of the canal was dug through the mountains in Panama. Workers faced mudslides and falling rocks during this phase of construction. The canal required building a large dam in the Gatun River, which created an artificial lake called the Gatun Lake. Ships enter through three locks on one side, sail across the Gatun Lake and leave through three locks on the other side of the canal.

In 1999, the United States transferred ownership and control of the canal to Panama. The canal is still important to the world economy. Over 14,000 ships travel through the canal every year. Ships pay large tolls to get through the canal, but it is still less expensive than going around South America. It takes ships between 8-20 hours to travel through the Panama Canal from the Pacific Ocean to the Atlantic Ocean.
