

2. individuals who operate in the non-formal education sector, which includes children and adults from all social groups such as families, employees, managers, and decision-makers in non-formal as well as environmental domains.

Since man (members of the public) is at the centre of the interaction with the environment through the use technology, which has been held accountable for numerous environmental crises experienced in the world today, there is need to educate the general public on the impact of their activities on the environment. Every category of the audience can be easily reached through the use of the library as information concerning the environment is deposited in various forms and stacked in the libraries. The library assists in the dissemination of information and knowledge about the environment developed through scientific researches to the general public. It would be worthy of note that such knowledge would not be of any use if it does not get to the reach of the people who would utilize it for the preservation of environmental quality.

This is the reason every global gathering on environmental education calls for the establishment of resource centres through which information about the environment and its associated problems could be disseminated to the people with the intention of inculcating in them appropriate knowledge and attitudes that could lead to change in their behaviour toward the environment. Nigeria, in its National Policy on Environment (2016), proposes the establishment of environmental education resource centre as one of its policy strategies for educating her citizens on environmental issues and problems as well as probable solutions to the problems as an attempt toward safeguarding the environment and its resources, hence the need for library as one of the environmental education resource centres. The building of collections of environmental materials in the libraries is for the assistance and studies covering the environment ranging from our offices, markets, which includes shops and our homes where materials such as bringing clean energy home, household waste disposal, 'how a focus on nature is changing', climate solutions at work, nature is medicine but what is the right dose? Should you exercise outside in air pollution (soot darkening daily?), threats from the toxics from the industries etc. are developed and deposited.

A special section in the library can be created where materials such as books and magazines dealing with focus on the environment can be kept. In order to reach a wide audience that can no longer be reached solely by printed materials, the modern library houses a variety of information, both printed and audio-visual. A book may not have the same lasting impact because it is more abstract, especially for those who do not enjoy reading.

Audio-visual materials such as film teach about environmental awareness and action not just by sharing topic films, but by reducing waste and recycling, offsetting carbon emissions, etc. They also encourage environmental documentary on contemporary environmental issues. In the western world, film industries act these environmental films during festivals and make sure they are recorded, kept, and preserved in the libraries. The Environmental Film Festival (EFF), the largest exhibition of environmental film in the United States, is a prime example. Through the medium of cinema, the Environmental Film Festival (EFF) aims to increase public awareness of environmental issues. The library did not just stop in the preservation and collection of these important materials, they also compile and keep ready a list of environmental film festivals for producers and as a great resource for who may be interested to read about the happenings in the environment acted through films (Harcwood, n.d).

Visual aids are also highly powerful teaching aids for environmental values. Although the saying "one image is worth a thousand words" may be overstated, Armstrong (1971) contends that there is no better way for an audience to understand the difference between a beautiful natural setting and one that is crowded or polluted. Visual materials can be posted or fixed in roll-up stands as well as projected with in-focus at strategic places to draw the attention of the library users on environmental issues plaguing the world today. Visual materials such as posters and placards can have inscriptions like: Stop purchasing chemicals that
