Financially vulnerable consumers are often associated with suboptimal financial behaviors. Evaluated financial education programs so far show difficulties to effectively reach this target population. In our attempt to solve this problem, we built a behaviorally informed financial education program incorporating insights from both motivational and behavioral change theories. In a quasi-experimental field study among Dutch financially vulnerable people, we compared this program with both a control group and a traditional program group. In comparison with the control group, we found robust positive effects of the behaviorally informed program on financial skills and knowledge and self-reported financial behavior, but not on other outcomes. Additionally, we did not find evidence that the behaviorally informed program performed better than the traditional program. Finally, we discuss the findings and limitations of this study in light of the financial education literature and provide implications for policymaking and directions for future research.

Introduction

A growing number of studies show the occurrence of suboptimal financial behaviors among low-income, low-educated, and unemployed consumers. These behaviors range from undersaving (Shartleff, 2009) to excessive and overly expensive overborrowing (Skiba and Tobacman, 2008; Cole et al., 2014), as well as poor financial management (Perry and Moore, 2000; De Beekun et al., 2019). Furthermore, low-income and low-educated consumers are less able to deal with shocks in income or expenses, for example, due to the Covid-19 outbreak, which makes them financially vulnerable (Häcker et al., 2018). Survey studies consistently show that financially vulnerable consumers have lower levels of financial knowledge and skills than others (Bernheim, 1998; Lusardi and Mitchell, 2014; De Beekun et al., 2019; Klapper and Lusardi, 2020; Lusardi et al., 2020b), while lower levels of financial knowledge are associated with poorer financial management (Hilgert et al.,
