

Literature Review: The Theory-Practice Gap

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Nursing is an objectively undervalued profession that is essential to a functioning hospital environment. It is established that theory has a valuable input on the effectiveness of the nursing staff in real-life situations (Oducado et al., 2019). However, it is often the case that the nursing theories are not prioritized in everyday scenarios, with the personnel giving preference to customs. The gap between theory and practice remains significant (Greenway et al., 2019) as some staff act in established ways without understanding the underlying reasons for them. The reasons for the gap being problematic, some potential causes, and various possible solutions will be discussed in this essay. Furthermore, the essay states the need for deeper research into the solutions of this problem that are efficient and current.

Why the Theory-Practice Gap is Problematic

Firstly, the gap between theory and practice diminishes the motivation of nursing students to put effort into studying the theories in nursing schools. If the students believe that their time is being wasted and that the knowledge they obtain will not be used in their future careers, they will be less motivated to study. Secondly, the gap can decrease the trust level between the nursing personnel and the patients. The credibility of the nursing professionals falters when it is clear that they do not follow learned theories (Leach & Tucker, 2018). Lastly, an increase in the gap might lead to a decrease in the quality of patient care (Salifu et al., 2018). Since the nurses do not always know the underlying reasons for the customs they follow in practice, they might not act in the most efficient or correct ways in unusual situations. Since the nursing theories are often relatively abstract, there is an established lack of faith in nursing research which needs to be addressed.

Potential Solutions

The potential solutions include increasing clinical time, increasing motivation, and educating the education staff on the problem. Firstly, according to Safazadeh et al.
