Relationship Between Teamwork and Team Performance

Mark Hwang,2019 Much interest exists in using Enterprise Resource Planning simulation ERPsim games to help students learn complex concepts involved in Enterprise Resource Planning ERP systems However little research has explored factors that contribute to team performance during an ERPsim game The current study investigated teamwork as a contributor to team performance in the context of a competition The research measured teamwork in five dimensions contributing to the team s work interacting with teammates keeping the team on track expecting quality and having relevant knowledge skills and abilities KSA Net income was the measure for team performance Participants also rated their satisfaction with their team Data from 62 student teams showed that all 5 teamwork dimensions had a positive correlation with net income Moreover all correlations were statistically significant except the relationship between keeping the team on track and net income Teams with relevant KSA were more likely to generate higher net income Expecting quality was the second most significant dimension followed by interacting with teammates and contributing to the team s work All five teamwork dimensions had a significant positive correlation with team satisfaction This research suggests that students will likely engage in good teamwork during a game if it is set up as a high stakes competition Additionally good teamwork will likely result in higher team performance and satisfaction The evidence should encourage more widespread adoption of ERPsim games as a means for teaching and assessing teamwork in addition to learning ERP concepts

It's a Team Game Eleanor Martin,2015

Gaming and Shared Situation Awareness ,2000 The Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency DARPA is interested in exploring key factors that affect how teams particularly distributed teams develop what is called shared situational awareness SSA in an operational environment The DARPA Program Manager for the Wargaming the Asymmetric Environment program asked CNA to address these issues with subcontracting support from ThoughtLink Incorporated The focus of the project was to demonstrate how wargaming could be used as a testbed for conducting experiments to explore these key factors in team SSA The approach centers on the use of a simplified though not quite abstract game that allows us to tailor its design and mode of play to focus on the specific research items of interest In tie case of SSA we designed the game so that the bulk of the operational task faced by the players lies precisely in building a shared picture their SSA of their operating area This approach removes much of the potential confounding between SSA and game playing skill a problem that can be associated with measuring a team s performance in a game primarily by measuring its success in performing a specific operational game task such as winning the game This paper summarizes our survey of SA and SSA research and describes the game we used as our test bed and outlines our experiment and its results We conclude by discussing what we learner and speculating on where our research could lead in the future

Coordination Experience and Team Performance Cristian L. Dezso, Thorsten Grohsjean, Tobias Kretschmer, 2014 In cross functional teams team performance depends on how skillfully function managers carry out the cross function coordination of team members complementary expertise and activities In this paper we argue i that function managers coordination skills develop in part through the coordination experience gained from interacting with managers from other function ii that coordination experience has general and firm specific dimensions and iii that coordination experience leads to better team performance Using data on development teams in the electronic games industry we show that coordination experience and its general and firm specific components have a positive impact on the commercial success of electronic games and that this effect is robust to tests for omitted variables and reverse causality Our results have implications for the theory of learning and coordination in teams and for the strategy and practice of team design in project based organizations

Rules for Playing the Motivation Game Peter Gerrickens, Marijke Verstege, 2002 A highly motivated workforce is the Holy Grail for any organization And yet for many managers and employees a surefire method for motivating yourself or your people remains elusive Gower have a new tool that will help The Motivation Game uses four sets of cards 140 in total plus four blanks Activity Cards Inspiration Cards Prior Condition Cards Obstacle Cards to enable teams and individuals to explore what motivates and demotivates them at work and how to increase the former There are no glib answers here rather 22 different methods of play for team and personal development Some of the games use individual sets of cards and some of them mix and match two or even all four sets The Game recognizes that motivation as with most workplace techniques is intimately linked with how we perceive things our state of mind and the ways in which we communicate The Motivation Game is the follow up to the highly successful The Feedback Game and The Development Game The first two games in this trilogy have been published in a total of nine European languages and sold in excess of 40 000 copies If The Feedback Game is all about who I am and The Development Game about what I can do then The Motivation Game completes the picture with what I want from work and life Those trainers and facilitators who know the earlier games will understand the potential of The Motivation Game For those that are new to Peter Gerrickens's work the Game is a deceptively simple tool for exploring fundamental ideas at the heart of performance management

Team Games For Trainers Nilson, 2004-06 Team building isn't a game it's a serious fast growing approach to human resources development and total quality management And with books of games for trainers in big demand employees who must create and manage teams will find this one uniquely effective and enjoyable Team Games for Trainers contains 100 ready to use games exercises and activities to build teams through cultural assessment organizational change readiness personal skill building and empowerment to help teams function through work definition role requirements and evaluation and to maintain teams through training for non trainers communication conflict management and problem solving For further ease of use each game is self contained with templates answer sheets and clear explanations of objectives and procedures

Getting on the

Same Page Katy B. Tran, 2012 ABSTRACT Team coordination has been an area of interest for researchers in military business social and cognitive psychology while only relatively recently emerging as area of growing interest for researchers in sport psychology Research on teams in sport traditionally has been focused on the social characteristics of the team such as cohesion and leadership Additionally when the role of cognition in skilled performance in sport has been examined the interest primarily has been in the cognitive processes at the individual level As a response Eccles and Tenenbaum 2004 proposed a socio cognitive conceptualization of team coordination in sport that has been used to frame much of the extant research in sport However to date most research on team cognition and coordination in sport has been conducted using the individual as the unit of analysis The present study is a response to the need for research that captures the experience of the team as a whole and in context to further understanding of cognitive processes underlying skilled team performance A study was conducted with a men s collegiate soccer team over the course of a competitive season Cognitive field research was used to investigate how the team developed modified and executed coordinated action in a natural setting This method was selected on the basis that it affords the opportunity to capture contextual and social factors that influence the cognitive processes underlying skilled team performance The key themes to emerge from the research were the importance of team members long term shared knowledge moment to moment shared knowledge and challenges to team coordination The findings presented support the conceptualization of team coordination as a socio cognitive construct Furthermore the results indicate that social properties of and social processes within a team impact the cognitive processes mediating coordination in teams As such the study demonstrates that the traditional focus on the cognitive processes of the individual removed from context might provide an incomplete explanation of the cognitive processes underlying skilled team performance The findings have implications for current understanding of team coordination and for practitioners seeking to enhance the functioning of sports teams

Games Teams Play Leslie Bendaly, 1996 Self directed work teams Task forces Committees Focus groups Partnerships These are the words of the 90s workplace But once the teams are formed how do you turn these groups of individuals into effective productive work teams Managers and trainers are discovering that games and activities are the key to triggering team development Games Teams Play provides everything you need to create a powerful team development session whether in a half hour meeting or a full day workshop the Team Fitness Test will take the pulse of each team to diagnose its strengths and pinpoint the areas that present opportunities for improvements handouts including worksheets participant s notes activity instructions individual and group assessments and overhead masters for use in your presentations There are more than 50 games exercises and activities to help groups develop the characteristics of high performance teams shared leadership strong communication cohesiveness and group synergy These stimulating and easy to use activities have helped hundreds of groups become healthy work teams Whether you are the manager trainer a human resources professional team leader or individual team player you can help your teams to greater levels of achievements
