

Creative Ways of Teaching Research Paper Writing

by Alejandro S. Bernardo

University of Santo Tomas

Abstract

Research paper writing remains an uninteresting and unexciting activity for many university students. They may not have realized its indispensable value in their respective disciplines and target workplaces. Hence, teachers must provide more enticing and more motivating classroom-based writing tasks to spur students' interest in producing varied academic texts. It is in this light that this paper proposes a number of "fun tasks" that teachers may use as their pre-writing tasks, lesson springboards or enrichment exercises when they teach the rudiments of academic writing or research paper production. The use of these "fun tasks" is based on the premise that cultivating students' interest in research largely depends on the creativity of the teachers and the appeal of classroom activities and that learning could better take place when students are motivated and when they enjoy the learning process at the same time.

Introduction

University education requires students to produce academic papers not only in English courses but also in other disciplines. But soon after the opening of the classes, teachers would often observe that the previously thrill-filled classroom is painted with boredom, passiveness and lack of enthusiasm when they start teaching the rigors of research paper writing. Writing an academic paper remains a difficult, trying, and intimidating task for learners (Millions, 2008; Abalos, Bashas, Gamboa, Alfonso, & Ligawen, 2008) and they sometimes associate research paper production merely with voluminous references and a semester of sleepless nights.

The foregoing observation is saddening since most of the courses a student will take while in a university require research paper writing as a scholarly exercise. In the university where the present writer is currently teaching, for instance, many students feel inundated and beleaguered by the procedure, especially when they have to repeatedly revise their drafts. They usually have to cram and rush to hand in their term or library papers on time because they lack the motivation to start their writing earlier. As expected, the cramming and rushing frequently results in research papers that are poorly developed both in content and form.
