School

School in the 1960s

Schools in the 1960s were not too different from schools today.

Subjects studied were quite similar, although there was no national curriculum, and no SATs.

Discipline

Most children were very well behaved at school in the 1960s. They were taught to respect their teachers and to always work hard.

Those children who did misbehave would be sent to the headmaster or headmistress, where they would either be whipped on the bottom with a cane, or hit on the hand with a wooden ruler.

Teachers would throw the board rubber at you, or tap your shoulders with a ruler if you didn't get on with your work.

Often, children were too scared to ask for help from their teachers.

The school day

Children rarely wore uniforms at primary schools.

In some schools, boys and girls had separate playgrounds.

Usually, at the end of each school year, all the children would take tests in English, Maths, Science and the topics that had been covered. Then they were told who had come top, second, third, etc., out of the whole class. It was good for the ones at the top, but not for the ones near the bottom.
