Technical Writing, 1931

The Theory and Practice of Technical Writing (Classic Reprint) Samuel Chandler Earle, 2015-08-06 Excerpt from The Theory and Practice of Technical Writing Every engineer who has given thought to the writing which he has to do as a part of his professional work knows that it is no easy task to get his ideas on paper in satisfactory form If he is ambitious in this as in other parts of his work he will succeed in expressing himself adequately just in proportion as he is a clear and well trained thinker and a keen observer of the ways in which other minds work If however he feels he ought to approach the task of writing more intelligently and to that end tries to get assistance he discovers that the kind of help he wants is hard to find The problems of a technical report or magazine article or of any of the longer works which engineers write are many of them similar to those of general composition of literary exposition or of argumentation but if the engineer turns for suggestions to treatises on these more definitely literary forms he will find much that does not apply to his case and he will fail to get guidance where he most needs it Yet the special forms of engineering writings have not been studied in schools or given adequate treatment in textbooks The reason for this lack is not far to seek Teachers of English have generally felt that the writings of engineers were not worthy of special study as forms of composition and without investigating the case they have assumed that the only preparation necessary for such writing was that given in the course in general composition Engineers who have acquired the ability to write effectively on the other hand have seldom had time to give their less skilled associates instruction in composition About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works

Nonacademic Writing Ann Hill Duin,Craig J. Hansen,2013-11-05 In this volume methodological cultural technological and political boundaries felt by writers are analyzed translated and challenged in a way that will appeal to researchers theorists graduate students instructors and managerial audiences Instead of extracting rules from previous research the contributors working from multidisciplinary perspectives describe and analyze the social and technological contexts surrounding nonacademic writing Their essays

Jimmie Killingsworth,Michael Gilbertson,2018-12-20 This important new text invites readers to step back from their busy professional lives and look at technical communication philosophically to ask fundamental questions such as what does it mean to communicate and how do language and graphics the signs or tools of the technical communicator relate to action in a technological world Through this excursion in the theory of technical discourse you will discover a fresh approach to reports manuals and proposals produced and consumed daily in business government and research organizations around the world The authors examine familiar genres in two relatively new ways

Academy-Industry Relationships and Partnerships Tracy Bridgeford,Kirk St. Amant,2017-07-05 In the field of technical communication academics and industry practitioners alike regularly encounter the same question What exactly is it you do Their responses often reveal a fundamental difference of perspective on what the field is and how it operates For example academics might discuss ideas in terms of rhetorical theory while practitioners might explain concepts through more practical approaches involving best business practices And such differences can have important implications for how the field as a whole moves forward over time This collection explores ideas related to forging effective academia industry relationships and partnerships so members of the field can begin a dialogue designed to foster communication and collaboration among academics and industry practitioners in technical communication To address the various factors that can affect such interactions the contributions in this collection represent a broad range of approaches that technical communicators can use to establish effective academy industry partnerships and relationships in relation to an area of central interest to both education The 11 chapters thus present different perspectives on and ideas for achieving this goal In so doing the contributors discuss programmatic concerns workplace contexts outreach programs and research and writing The result is a text that examines different general contexts in which academia industry relationships and partnerships can be established and maintained It also provides readers with a reference for exploring such interactions Virtual Collaborative Writing in the Workplace: Computer-Mediated Communication Technologies and Processes Hewett, Beth L., Robidoux, Charlotte, 2010-06-30 This book investigates the use of computer mediated communication technologies and collaborative processes to facilitate effective interdependent collaboration in writing projects especially in virtual workplace settings Provided by publisher Writing Workplace Cultures Jim Henry, 2000 In Writing Workplace Cultures An Archaeology of Professional Writing Jim Henry analyzes eighty three workplace writing ethnographies composed over seven years in a variety of organizations He views the findings as so many shards in an archaeology on professional writing at the beginning of the twenty first century These ethnographies were composed by either practicing or aspiring writers participating in a Master s program in professional writing and editing Henry solicited the writers participation in informed intersubjective research focused on issues and questions of their own determination Most writers studied their own workplace composing auto ethnographies that problematize these workplaces local cultures even as they depict writing practices within them Henry establishes links between current professional writing practices and composition instruction as both were shaped by national economic development and local postsecondary reorganization throughout the twentieth century He insists that if we accept basic principles of social constructionism the text demonstrates ways in which writers write workplace cultures to produce goods and services whose effects go far beyond the immediate needs of its clients
