Critical success factors and best practices for business succession. Daniel Scheffold, 2014-03-03 Master's Thesis from the year 2013 in the subject Business economics Business Management Corporate Governance grade 1.3 University of Applied Sciences Stuttgart Fakultät für Wirtschaftswissenschaften course General Management International Business Management language English abstract Purpose Knowledge of the factors that influence success in the succession of family businesses is limited Despite recent studies theory cannot explain why only 10 % of all family businesses make it to the third generation The aim of this dissertation is to identify critical success factors for succession in family businesses Methodology A qualitative multiple case study design with third generation family businesses two from Germany and one from the UK was employed A cross case analysis was carried out to identify critical success factors and then complemented by a single case analysis Findings Nine of the ten tested hypotheses were confirmed These were successor development professionalization knowledge transfer capital structure corporate governance family harmony stepping aside succession planning and long term orientation The hypothesis about dividend policy was not confirmed No significant differences were found to be based on national influence Practical Implications From the results a new model for family business succession is developed which leads to four best practice recommendations These are the implementation of shared leadership linking ownership to management ensure communication in the family to create family harmony and the use of outside consultants Limitations Due to the case study design this research does not provide statistical generalizable findings Originality Value This study increases the knowledge about critical success factors of succession in family businesses The use of cases from two countries and three different industries increases the significance The newly developed model for family business succession proposes a new view on the succession process that should be tested by future studies

Creating Silicon Valley in Europe Steven Casper,2007-07-05 Through the 1990s and early 2000s the strength of the United States economy has been linked to its ability to foster large numbers of small innovative technology companies a few of which have grown to dominate new industries such as Microsoft Genentech or Google US technology clusters such as Silicon Valley have become tremendous engines of innovation and wealth creation and the envy of governments around the world Creating Silicon Valley in Europe examines trajectories by which new technology industries emerge and become sustainable across different types of economies Governments around the world have poured vast sums of money into policies designed to foster clusters of similar start up firms in their economies This book employs careful empirical studies of the biotechnology and software industries in the United States and several European economies to examine the relative success of policies aimed at cultivating the Silicon Valley model of organizing and financing companies in Europe Influential research associated with the varieties of capitalism literature has argued that countries with liberal market orientations such as the United States and the United Kingdom can more easily design policies to cultivate success in new technology industries compared to countries associated with organized economies such as Germany and Sweden The book's empirical findings support the view that national institutional factors strongly condition the success of new technology policies However the study also identifies important cases in which radically innovative new technology firms have thrived within organized economies Through examining case of both success and failure Creating Silicon Valley in Europe helps identify constellations of market and governmental activities that can lead to the emergence of sustainable clusters of new technology firms across both organized and liberal market economies GERMANY Major Banks, Financial, and Insurance Companies Directory ,
