

RETAILING EXAM 3 STUDY GUIDE

CHAPTER 13 - RETAIL PRICING

Pricing Strategies:

1. High/Low Pricing: discount the initial prices for merchandise through sales promotions (retailers use this frequently, often weekly); however, some customers learn to expect frequent sales and wait until merchandise they want goes on sale/stock up at low prices
2. Everyday Low Pricing: EDLP, continuity of retail prices at a level somewhere between regular non-sale prices and deep-discount sale price of high/low retailers (occasionally have sales, just not as frequently as high/low); aren't always the lowest prices in the market; supermarkets, home improvement centers, and discount stores
 - a. Low-price guarantee policy: guarantee customers that the retailer will have the lowest price in a market for products it sells, promises to match/beat any lower price found in market

Advantages of High/Low Pricing Strategy:

1. Increase Profits: retailers can charge higher prices to customers who are not price-sensitive while charging lower prices to price-sensitive customers who will wait for "low" sale price
2. Creates Excitement: "get them while they last" atmosphere occurs during sale
3. Sells Slow-Moving Merchandise: sales allow retailers to get rid slow merchandise by discounting price

Advantages of EDLP Approach:

1. Assures Customers of Low Prices: customers have been come conditioned to buying on sale, lets customers know they will get the same low prices every time they patronize EDLP retailer
2. Reduces Advertising and Operating Expenses: stable prices limit need for weekly sale advertising, retailers do not incur labor costs of changing price tags and putting up sale signs
3. Reduces Stockouts and Improves Inventory Management: reduces large variations in demand caused by frequent sales with large markdowns, fewer stockouts—satisfied customers and higher sales

Setting Retail Prices: 5 factors retailers must consider...

1. Price Sensitivity of Customers: price sensitivity of customers determines how many units will be sold at different price levels; if customers in target market are price-sensitive, sales will decrease when price increases; 1 way to measure price sensitivity is a price experiment
