

A close-up photograph of a window covered in raindrops. A bright red light source, possibly a taillight, is visible on the left, creating a strong red glow and illuminating the raindrops. The rest of the window is in shadow, with some ambient light from the right.

Next time a stranger talks to you when you're alone, just look at them shocked and whisper "You can see me?"

What Determines Social Behavior?
Investigating the Role of Emotions, Self-Centered Motives, and Social Norms Corrado Corradi-Dell'Acqua, Leonie Koban, Susanne Leiberg, Patrik Vuilleumier, Ernst Fehr, 2016-09-28 Human behavior and decision making is subject to social and motivational influences such as emotions norms and self other regarding preferences The identification of the neural and psychological mechanisms underlying these factors is a central issue in psychology behavioral economics and social

neuroscience with important clinical social and even political implications. However, despite a continuously growing interest from the scientific community, the processes underlying these factors as well as their ontogenetic and phylogenetic development have so far remained elusive. In this Research Topic, we collect articles that provide challenging insights and stimulate a fruitful controversy on the question of what determines social behavior. Indeed, over the last decades, research has shown that introducing a social context to otherwise abstract tasks has diverse effects on social behavior. On the one hand, it may induce individuals to act irrationally, for instance, to refuse money, but on the other hand, it improves individuals' reasoning in that formerly difficult abstract problems can be easily solved. These lines of research led to distinct, although not necessarily mutually exclusive, models for socially driven behavioral changes. For instance, a popular theoretical framework interprets human behavior as a result of a conflict between cognition and emotion, with the cognitive system promoting self-interested choices and the emotional system triggered by the social context operating against them. Other theories favor social norms and deontic heuristics in biasing human reasoning and encouraging choices that are sometimes in conflict with one's interest. Few studies attempted to disentangle between these as well as other models. As a consequence, although insightful results arise from specific domains/tasks, a comprehensive theoretical framework is still missing. Furthermore, studies employing neuroimaging techniques have begun to shed some light on the neural substrates involved in social behavior, implicating consistently, although not exclusively, portions of the limbic system, the insular, and the prefrontal cortex. In this context, a challenge for present research lies not only in further mapping the brain structures implicated in social behavior or in describing in detail the functional interaction between these structures, but in showing how the implicated networks relate to different theoretical models. This is the Research Topic hosted by members of the Swiss National Center of Competence in Research Affective Sciences: Emotions in Individual Behaviour and Social Processes. We collected contributions from the international community which extended the current knowledge about the psychological and neural structures underlying social behavior and decision making. In particular, we encouraged submissions from investigators arising from different domains: psychology, behavioral economics, affective sciences, etc., implementing different techniques: behavior, electrophysiology, neuroimaging, brain stimulations, on different populations: neurotypical adults, children, brain-damaged or psychiatric patients, etc. Animal studies are also included, as the data reported are of high comparative value. Finally, we also welcomed submissions of meta-analytical articles, mini-reviews, and perspective papers which offer provocative and insightful interpretations of the recent literature in the field.

Primate Behavior Leonard A. Rosenblum, 2013-10-02. Primate Behavior: Developments in Field and Laboratory Research, Volume 2, features a collection of papers that points toward the significance and efficacy of the interspecific and interenvironmental comparative approaches to the study of primate behavior. Continuing the general theme of the series, this volume combines a number of papers varying in scope and focus, ranging from extensive individual studies to comprehensive review. It allows workers from a variety of biological disciplines to obtain a more substantial grasp of primate behavior The book contains five chapters and begins with a study on the behavior of rhesus macaques in several locales in India providing substantial new material on the behavior of these species in ecological context This is followed by separate chapters that present comparative studies of the behavior of Callicebus and Saimiri in field and laboratory settings of varying types experiments on communication of affect in monkeys and a review of behavior involved in parturition throughout the primate order
