SPORT IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS
EXPECTATIONS, POSSIBILITIES AND EFFECTS

ABSTRACT: The aim of this article is to show how sport can matter in international relations. Sport can be a subject or a tool of international relations. It can be used by states or geopolitical blocks to display their alleged superiority or any other desired characteristic. Governments may desire athletic victories, which are meant to imply, for example, the power of the state and its political and economic system. Participation in sport can also be used for political reasons on an international scale; a number of political objectives can be achieved by states by participating (or not) in sports events. Not only is sport affected by a country's policies, but on certain occasions sports events can influence states.

KEY WORDS: sport, politics, international relations, sport as a political tool.

Sport can be considered as one of the most exciting modern phenomena—modern because, in its current form, it was born no longer than 150 years ago, exciting because it wins the interest of millions of people. It is estimated that the London 2012 Olympic Games' opening ceremony was watched on TV by 900 million people.¹ Poland's most viewed television broadcasts were the European Football Championships in 2012 in which the opening match between Poland and Greece was watched by 15.5 million viewers, and the Salt Lake City 2012 Olympic ski jumping
