Approaches to Bootstrapping Jürgen Weissenborn,Barbara Höhle,2001-08-09 Volume 1 of Approaches to Bootstrapping focuses on early word learning and syntactic development with special emphasis on the bootstrapping mechanisms by which the child using properties of the speech input enters the native linguistic system Topics discussed in the area of lexical acquisition are cues and mechanisms for isolating words in the input special features of motherese and their role for early word learning the determination of first word meanings memory and related processing capacities in early word learning and understanding and lexical representation and lexical access in early language production The papers on syntactic development deal with the acquisition of grammatical prosodic features for learning language specific syntactic regularities Volume 2 of Approaches to Bootstrapping focuses on the interaction between the development of prosodic and morphosyntactic knowledge as evidenced in the early speech of Dutch English German Portuguese Spanish Danish Islandic and Swedish children shedding new light on the relation between universal and language specific aspects of language acquisition Another section of this volume deals with new approaches to language acquisition using ERP techniques The papers discuss in detail the relation between the development of language skills and changes in neurophysiological aspects of the brain The potentials of these techniques for the development of new tools for an early diagnosis of children who are at risk for developmental language disorders are also pointed out The closing section contains a synopsis of interactionist approaches to language acquisition a discussion of the genetic and experiential origin of primitive linguistic elements in acquisition and a discussion of structural and developmental aspects of bird song in comparison to human language The two volumes making up Approaches to Bootstrapping present a state of the art interdisciplinary and cross linguistic overview of recent developments in first language acquisition research

The Crosslinguistic Study of Language Acquisition Dan Isaac Slobin, 2014-03-05 In this final volume in the series the contributors attempt to expand the contexts in which child language has been examined crosslinguistically The chapters build on themes that have been touched on anticipated and promised in earlier volumes in the series The study of child language has been situated in the disciplines of psychology and linguistics and has been most responsive to dominant issues in those fields such as nativism and learning comprehension and production errors input and universals of morphology and syntax The context has primarily been that of the individual child interacting with a parent and deciphering the linguistic code The code has been generally treated in these volumes as a system of morphology and syntax with little attention to phonology and prosody Attention has been paid occasionally to the facts that the child is acquiring language in a sociocultural setting and that language is used in contexts of semantic and pragmatic communication In addition there has been a degree of attention paid to the interactions between language and cognition in the process of development As for individual differences between children they have been discussed in those studies where they could not be avoided but such variation has rarely been the focus of systematic attention Differences between individual languages have been of great interest but these differences have not often been placed in a framework of systematic typological variation And although languages and their grammars change over time the focus of attention on the individual child learner has generally led to neglect of explanatory principles that are best found on the level of linguistic diachrony rather than the level of innate ideas or patterns of learning and cognition in the individual child The chapter authors seek to explore these neglected contexts in more depth
