Simmons, 1975 Women of the Red Earth Tonya Locklear, 2017-11 Inside this book of poetry by Tonya Holy Elk Locklear Oglala Lakota Lumbee and art by Margie Beth Labadie are poems told through an Indigenous lens from the histories that American Indians encountered and still face today and stories of personal experiences from the farms of southeastern North Carolina from tobacco fields to corn fields to pea fields and the South Dakota plains Locklear's poems include words from the Lakota language Labadie's colorful artwork illustrates each poem and story The visually striking illustrated literary works are meant to knock down the stereotypical walls that continue to be the European perception of Native Americans Labadie's artwork incorporates many of Locklear's Native American objects in ways that entice viewers to come closer to read stories written in poetry and prose Locklear and Labadie's collaboration is meant to create new spaces for Native Americans and Non Native Americans to see each other in new ways They hope the book Women of the Red Earth will resonate with readers to spark dialogues and talking circles with and about Indigenous peoples This book can be used for informal talking circles to encourage discussions Open its pages and become part of these histories and experiences Talking Circles are based on the sacred Native American tradition of sharing circles Informal talking circles or group discussions allow a person to freely share and express themselves in a comfortable and safe space A Talking Circle is for sharing telling and teaching from the heart where wisdom speaks of hope joy struggles triumph To encourage growth and healing This book is a companion to the traveling exhibition Women of the Red Earth and contains imagery from the fifteen framed works It is the goal of Tonya Holy Elk Locklear and Margie Beth Labadie partners in Earth Women Arts Inc that these images and words spark and expand dialogs on Indigenous peoples in as many venues as possible
