account of the forms of mental representation that we call sensory To sense something one must have some capacity to discriminate among sensory qualities but there are other requirements What are they and how can they be put together to yield full blown sensing Drawing on the findings of current neuroscience Clark proposes and defends the hypothesis that the various modalities of sensation share a generic form that he calls feature placing Sensing proceeds by picking out place times in or around the body of the sentient organism and characterizing qualities features that appear at those place times Such feature placing is a primitive kind probably the most primitive kind of mental representation Once its peculiarities have been described many of the puzzles about the intentionality of sensation and the phenomena that lead some to label it pseudo intentional can be resolved The hypothesis casts light on many other troublesome phenomena including the varieties of illusion the problem of projection the notion of a visual field the location of after images the existence of sense data and the role of perceptual demonstratives A Theory of Sentience will interest anyone interested in the topics of sensation
