Squeeze Play a Baseball Novel Gary Frisch, 2016-06-03 Major League Baseball has been crippled by yet another players strike and the fans have had enough tired of paying to see ballplayers with seven figure egos but ten cent work ethics When baseball's commissioner floats the idea of enlisting the minor leaguers to keep revenues flowing Lew Pearson the aging player manager of the Triple A Indianapolis Outlaws sees his chance to fulfill a lifelong dream Having never had more than a cup of coffee in the big league Lew leaves his wife and two young kids behind to play in the bigs even though he knows he and his teammates will just be the pawns of the owners Baseball runs deep in his blood his father's own professional dreams were trampled on many years before and despite the big asterisk that will accompany every game it's an opportunity that beckons him But no one including Lew the owners and the striking Major Leaguers could predict how fans would embrace these farmhands who take the field every day not for their big paychecks but purely for the love of the game At first the crowds are small but as the fan frenzy takes root in ballparks across the country both sides of the strike confront a new normal and an audacious plan takes shape in board rooms to determine once and for all whether the Major Leaguers or the minor leaguers will get the privilege of remaining in the show In the great tradition of Bull Durham Field of Dreams and Major League Squeeze Play delivers rousing on field excitement as well as the off field exploits of young and not so young ballplayers suddenly thrust into strange new circumstances It is a tale of pride determination loss growth and second chances set against the groomed outfield grass and dusty base paths of America's baseball shrines Author Gary Frisch is a passionate sports fan lifelong writer and former journalist A frequent freelance contributor to The Philadelphia Inquirer and other newspapers and magazines he was named a LinkedIn Top Voice of 2015 for his various contributions to the business networking website's Pulse blog
